PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 102^{d} CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

SENATE—Friday, February 21, 1992

(Legislative day of Thursday, January 30, 1992)

The Senate met at 9 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The prayer will be led by the Senate Chaplain, Reverend Dr. Richard C. Halverson.

Dr. Halverson, please.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

There is no power but of God. The Powers that be are ordained of God. * * They are ministers of God for good.* * .—Romans 13.

Almighty God, Lord of History, Ruler of the nations, in this election year, brood over our land. Save political campaigns from being like warfare in which opponents are enemies to be destroyed; in which ideas are like missiles and words like nuclear warheads or firebombs or landmines. Awaken us to the truth that God is involved in government, that indifference to spiritual values threatens the foundation upon which our political system was built; that candidates and parties forget God at the peril of their own existence.

Dear God, remind the people that our government political system is based upon their sovereignty that their failure to vote is as serious as the failure of their Senators to vote. Deliver them from lame excuses for not voting. Ruler of history deliver us all from angry scapegoating and help us all take our mandate seriously.

Save us from a political champaign that degenerates into a destructive force that ravages the land it was intended to heal, leaving it divided, decimated, destroyed, rather than healed, and whole and strong.

In the name of Jesus incarnate love. Amen.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order.

Under the previous order, leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Also under the order there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business, not to extend beyond the hour of 9:15 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE] is recognized to speak for up to 10 minutes.

The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, first I want to thank the Chair.

U.S. OLYMPIC HOCKEY TEAM

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, 2 hours from now in Meribel, France, our country and particularly Rhode Island's eyes will be focused on a group of 20 young men, some of the finest in our Nation, and of course I am referring to the U.S. Olympic Hockey team.

Today at 11 o'clock, our time, they start the semifinal game against the Unified Team from the former Soviet Union. It is our hope that their Cinderella-like ride that this team had since going to France will continue toward the ultimate goal which is a gold medal.

Mr. President, this team is being led by two outstanding Rhode Islanders. The captain of the team is Clark Donatelli, and one of the stars on it is David Emma. Just a word about both.

Clark is an outstanding forward from North Providence, RI. He attended Moses Brown School in Providence and later Boston University. This is the second time he has been on an Olympic team. He was on the team 4 years ago. His leadership abilities have been acknowledged by his teammates when they elected him captain of this year's team.

David Emma is from Cranston, RI. He is a graduate of Bishop Hendricken High School in Warwick and later starred at Boston College. David was the 1991 recipient of the Hoby Baker Award. The Hoby Baker Award in hockey is similar to the Heisman Trophy in football. In other words, it is given to the outstanding college hockey player in the Nation.

Our State of Rhode Island is nationally recognized for its youth hockey program. And indeed, Mr. President, both of these young men came up through the youth hockey programs that we have.

So I am delighted that the entire world is now able to see the outstanding results of this program, which is made possible by the tireless efforts of volunteers, the volunteer coaches, and of course the parents who get up so early in the morning to see their children have ice time, and the sponsors as well.

Clark, David, and their dedicated teammates—and I want to pay tribute to the other members of this outstanding team—will carry the dreams of their childhood and the hopes and best wishes of all Americans onto the ice at Meribel, France, today.

They are a credit to their families, to their coaches, to their teachers, and to their friends—and I might say to their home States.

Their quest for the gold has been a wonderful sight to behold, Mr. President, and it has been a source of inspiration for all of us. We wish them well today.

I wish to thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

LEONARD HELTON AND THE ECONOMY

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, I wanted to call attention to the testimony of a fine North Carolinian, Mr. Leonard Helton, given before the House Ways and Means Committee on Thursday, February 6.

Mr. Helton is a North Carolina resident, and he spoke before the committee of his personal experiences in dealing with this recession that we are in, as well as the effects of the economy on others in the American work force.

Mr. Helton is a textile worker from Gaston County, NC. He has felt firsthand the repercussions of a sagging economy in the textile and the apparel business, and he knows what he is talking about. He was invited to come to Washington to tell his story to the U.S. Congress and he agreed to accept this invitation.

What Mr. Helton wanted was to take an active role in getting the economy back on track. He pointed out the flaws of our system as he saw them. He offered changes that he felt were needed. He talked to a great many people in his local community and had a sense of what people were thinking. And he eagerly anticipated questions and discussions with the members of the congressional committee that had invited him to present his views.

What he expected from Congress was a listening ear and a helping hand, and he got neither.

Mr. Helton devoted a great deal of time to the composition of his speech. It is a very good speech. It is a very good statement.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the speech be printed in full following my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. SANFORD. He rode the train up here from Gastonia to Washington, and he waited for close to 4 hours before giving his testimony, sitting there waiting his time. One prominent person came in and was put ahead of him, which was all right with him. But when that person left, all of the members of the committee left. Only one Member of Congress was present to hear Mr. Helton's speech. When he was finished speaking, no one had anything to say to him. No questions were asked, no discussions were carried on, and no one addressed his concerns or asked him anything about his own experiences.

Well, you can understand that he left town discouraged, disgusted, and understandably, outraged. He took with him the distinct message that Congress does not care for the troubles of the average worker.

You and I know there were explanations—of course, there were—of why more people were not there, and that it came at the beginning of a recess and people were hurried. But the explanations in this case hardly seem satisfactory.

So I have submitted this copy of Mr. Leonard Helton's testimony in the RECORD in the hopes that each Member of the Congress will take time to read it and remember just who we are here to represent, and remember, as I learned long ago, the great wisdom resides in the people.

EXHIBIT 1

STATEMENT OF LEONARD LEE HELTON, SR., STANLEY, NC

Representatives: First I want to thank each of you for allowing me to come before you and tell how I feel about the economic impact on myself, my family, and coworkers.

As a textile and apparel worker for 25 years, I have seen how the textile and apparel industry has continued at a slow pace, whereby some weak textile plants have stood inactive due to slow movement of goods sold into the textile related markets. You, as congressional leaders and elected officials of the people, must do something now to alleviate this great economic problem effecting the average American worker.

We, the American work force, cannot maintain ourselves on a fixed financial budget. This is due to increased taxes and higher financial obligations that are occurring every year. We do not receive enough raises in our salaries to overcome the obstacles presently at hand. We are not assured from 1 week to the next how many hours we will work or how well our product will be sold into the American market.

You probably feel it's up to the individual employees to stand ground and do the best they can. In this regard, both employers and employees of the textile industry have been trying since 1985 to get a textile and apparel bill passed by the President. This bill has been vetoed three times by our President.

In 1985 we attempted to get the Textile and Apparel Trade Act (H.R. 1154) passed by the President. On October 4, 1988, we were 11 votes short of overriding the President's veto.

Again, in 1990, roughly 200 Members of Congress introduced the Textile, Apparel, and Footwear Trade Act of 1990 (H.R. 4496). Also, Senator Ernest Hollings (D-S.C.) introduced identical legislation (S. 2144) in the Senate. The Senate began considering the bill on Friday, July 13 and passed the bill on Tuesday, July 15 by a vote of 68 to 32. During the past 6 years, the Senate has passed similar legislation three times. The goal of the House and Senate bills is to put foreign textile and apparel imports on par with the current growth rate of the U.S. domestic textile industry. The bill would have established global import quotas for each category of textile and textile products using the 1989 level of imports as a starting position. The bill would have allowed a 1-percent increase in foreign imports per year, consistent with the current growth rate of the domestic textile market.

Also, in January 1991, there was a bill (H.R. 713). This was a bill introduced to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to require that certain revenues attributable to tariffs levied on imports of textile machinery and parts thereof be applied to support research for the modernization of the American textile machinery industry.

Representatives, an economics professor from Belmont Abbey College, Mr. William Van Lear and I have drawn up a petition to enact job retraining and education programs in every major industry here in the United States.

The petition reads as follows:

"We believe that it can be financially and emotionally difficult for people who are unemployed or who work in declining industries to retrain, relocate and assume new jobs. Industries such as textiles, lumber, defense, steel, and coal are suffering and will continue to suffer economic hardships. Therefore, we advocate a Federal initiative, led by the Department of Labor in conjunction with Labor Departments in the States, to provide;

"(1) Grants and loans to families for retraining and education, and;

"(2) Easily accessed information for families on job availability and location.

"We propose that this program be financed by making the Federal income tax more flexible and from State income taxes."

May I inquire of you? How can an average worker purchase any "big ticket item" when he isn't assured of a steady income—this financial burden affects every American. * * * Less goods sold, less hours worked equals less basic income for the average worker. We are having a rough time of meeting our financial obligations.

This troublesome economic situation not only creates financial worries for the American worker, but it also translates into a stressful home environment. Please, be aware that economic stress effects every member of the family.

Pardon the expression, but we, the average worker, are "up to our ears" with increased taxes. If some action is not taken soon, we will see multitudes of American families go under.

Consider these figures on textile and apparel plant closings and jobs lost during the years 1989 through 1991. There were 67 plants closed and 72 thousand jobs lost over those three years. Of the 1.8 million textile workers nationwide, more than 300,000 are employed in North Carolina and 40,000 are employed in the tenth district of North Carolina alone.

I have been assured that in other related industries there are many plant closings and thousands of jobs lost during the past year alone. You may stipulate that these situations are due to modernization of plants and the technology in these plants. This may be true in a small way, but it comes full circle to the weak economic American market which continues to diminish.

An idea that would benefit the average American worker is to reduce taxation. To accomplish this, President Bush and elected officials, as yourselves, need to enact permanent reductions in Federal tax rates. Instead of a one-time year-end bonus, which is what the 300-dollar rebate plus would be, we need a permanent tax cut through reductions in income and Social Security tax rates. If their taxes were lowered on income, work would become rewarding and attractive, compared to welfare and leisure time.

Secondly, we need to lower taxes on investments. A cut in the capital gains tax would do a great deal to lay the foundation for future economic growth. Slashing the capital gains tax would encourage the kind of small business foundation that drives long-term economic growth. The large majority of new jobs in America are created by new and small businesses. The reward for the entrepreneur who initiates these companies is more often a capital gain rather than direct income. So reducing the capital gains tax will directly encourage entrepreneurs to begin new companies, thereby creating new jobs, and new products.

This would also help American industry to compete with overseas trade. Among the major industrial powers, the United States maximum rate of 33 percent of capital gains is one of the highest in the world. In Germany, South Korea, Taiwan and Hong Kong, the capital gains tax on investments held more than 1 year is zero. In Japan, the maximum rate is 1 percent of the sales price of 20 percent of the net gain.

Each time the capital gains tax has been reduced, revenues for the Federal Government have actually increased.

Representatives, I certainly hope that you, the committee, and our great President will do everything possible to alleviate this great economic challenge facing the average American worker.

May God's grace and blessing go with you in whatever decision you make.

Thank you.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of no quorum having been made, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order, morning business is closed.

HIGHER EDUCATION AMENDMENTS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will now resume consideration of S. 1150, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1150) to reauthorize the Higher Education Act of 1965, and for other purposes.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

Pending:

Specter/Shelby amendment No. 1691, to prohibit the Secretary of Veterans Affairs from furnishing, or from obligating funds available to the Department of Veterans Affairs to furnish, health care in Department of Veterans Affairs facilities under a rural health care sharing program to persons not eligible for such care under chapter 17 of title 38, United States Code.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I would like to speak briefly on the Specter amendment to S. 1150. Although I am interested in the concept behind the rural health care initiative that has been proposed by Secretary Derwinski and Secretary Sullivan, I have some reservations about it being implemented without a thorough review by the Congress. I believe Federal facilities should be used to their maximum potential, particularly in times of great fiscal constraints. I am also concerned, coming from a rural State, about our ability to increase access to health care for those living in obscure areas. I do think, however, that we must be able to measure the impacts such changes will have on the many veterans across the country who need quality health care, before widespread implementation.

In my own State of Oregon, the Portland Veterans Medical Center [PVAMC] currently has sharing agreements with several community groups. Its neighbor, the Oregon Health Sciences University, is the focus of many such agreements. One of the programs shared by the two facilities allows the Portland Veterans Medical Center to perform the university's liver transplants and thus, enable the PVAMC to make this service available to veterans as well. If this sharing agreement was not in existence, liver transplants would not be available to veterans in Oregon.

It is my hope, Mr. President, that the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee will hold hearings on this matter to evaluate its viability both within the veterans community and the health care community.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I will support the amendment of my colleague from Pennsylvania because he makes the excellent point that not enough groundwork has been laid for this project. I understand the concerns that have been voiced by veterans organizations. Any action we take that directly affects the promises we have made to those who have served our country must be fully considered. I do not believe any of us in this body intend to break those promises.

However, Mr. President, the agreement between the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of Health and Human Services does represent a well-intentioned attempt on the part of the Bush administration to increase access to health care in rural areas.

I, for one, want to commend Secretary Sullivan and Secretary Derwinski for this innovation. It is time for some creative thinking when it comes to addressing the health care needs not just of veterans, but of all Americans. I hope the Congress will not make a habit out of stifling any idea that happens to originate in the executive branch.

The Senator from Pennsylvania made the suggestion yesterday that some hearings ought to be held on the concept of utilizing veterans facilities to help provide health care in underserved areas. I wholeheartedly endorse this idea, and I urge my colleagues on the Veterans' Affairs Committee to schedule such hearings. I hope that this amendment is not the end of this proposal. We cannot afford to ignore any ideas for better utilization of Federal health care resources.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the amendment from the Senator from Pennsylvania. This amendment will halt any further movement of the Veterans' Administration to open its facilities to nonvets.

Mr. President, as chair of the Appropriations Subcommittee that funds the Veterans' Administration, I have worked very hard on veterans health care issues. These men and women who have fought for this country in foxholes around the world deserve the best we can provide them in health care services. And they should not have to wait in line behind anyone at a VA facility.

I have tried to make sure the Veterans' Administration focuses its efforts on quality health care. We have heard the horror stories of atrocious health care at some VA facilities, and that's why I was a major proponent of establishing a quality assurance program for every VA facility. We need to focus on more effective ways to serve our veterans and make sure each facility reaches the highest of standards.

Mr. President, I have heard from veterans throughout Maryland concerned about the precedent Secretary Derwinski's rural health initiative would set. I feel strongly that we owe them something for fighting for this country's freedom. I support the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania in making sure that we do not forget that commitment we have to make our veterans No. 1.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I rise to express my support for Senator SPECTER's amendment to prohibit the Department of Veterans Affairs from undertaking the rural health care initiative. As a cosponsor of Senator SHELBY's bill on this subject, I am concerned about the approach contained in the administration's initiative.

The rural health care initiative is a pilot project to allow nonveterans in certain rural areas to receive care at veterans hospitals. It was developed by the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of Health and Human Sevices—neither Congress nor the major veterans groups were consulted. Instead, we were advised only after the fact.

Under the rural health care initiative, the Department of Veterans Affairs would be reimbursed for any care given to a nonveteran, and Secretary Derwinski has indicated that the program would not displace any veteran seeking care.

Yet, veterans programs—most notably, the veterans health care system—were the target of significant cutbacks during the 1980's. Despite improvements over the last few years, veterans hospitals are still struggling to provide the quality health care we promised our veterans so long ago—and continue to promise our veterans today.

So, if some rural veterans facilities have the ability and resources to treat nonveterans, shouldn't we instead consider the possibility of reallocating some of those resources to veterans facilities that do need the help? If this Nation is going to continue to maintain a veterans health care system, then our priority should be to help all veterans within that system first.

Doctors, nurses, and equipment are desperately needed in many veterans hospitals. The veterans hospital in my State—at Elsmere—is in dire need of more nurses, more technicians, and more medical equipment. I simply do not believe that at this time we can treat nonveterans in veterans facilities without affecting the care of veterans.

Veterans organizations and VA officials in Delaware often tell me of the outstanding volunteer work taking place at veterans hospitals around the country. These volunteers are dedicated to helping and caring for those who served our country. Many of the volunteers are veterans and their spouses who have come to help their fellow veterans. Their contributions and their dedication are well-known. Because of professional personnel shortfalls, they have become—through both their time and their money—a supplement upon which the veteran patients have come to depend. They have been picking up the slack from a decade of neglect.

As the veteran population ages, the demands on veterans hospitals will only increase in the years ahead. I am concerned that we are relying too much on volunteers as a way to save money and that with increased demands, we will not be able to live up to the commitment we made to our veterans. In addition, I am concerned that if we weaken the veterans health care system today, the all important volunteer system may be undermined in the near future.

Mr. President, I recognize that the delivery of rural health care in this country needs to be dramatically improved. There is a tremendous shortage of health care personnel in many rural areas. The Congress and the administration need to work to improve health care services for rural Americans. Indeed, we need to improve the health care system for all Americans. But, it cannot be done—and should not be done—at the expense of our longstanding promise to America's veterans.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to vote on amendment No. 1691 on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

"(3) REFUND CREDIT.—For purposes of this section, a refund first shall be credited against any part B loan assistance and second against any grant awarded a student under this title for the period of enrollment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would state that there are 2 hours for debate on this amendment, to be equally controlled and divided.

The Senator from North Carolina.

The SANFORD. Mr. President, I am pleased to say that I think we will not need most of those 2 hours. Staff worked very diligently late last night in effect, to change direction on trying to cure a problem that needs curing, and I believe we have now come up with a very satisfactory solution.

Certainly, we need to do something about the abuse of student loans. There is not any question that some institutions have exploited students who were not prepared to learn; talked them into enrolling; gave them no education and a promise of a job; took the loan money and turned it into profits and then expected these people who were so betrayed to pay the loan back. There is no wonder that we have so many defaulted loans.

How do we get at that problem? How do we take these fly-by-nights, these exploiters of young people and get rid of them? And how do we do that without damaging the purpose of having a student loan program, or without creating additional unnecessary bureaucracy for the institutions that are performing responsibly?

I think it is important for us to remember a student loan program is always going to have a fairly high default rate for the very reason that many people who are loaned this money are at the margin.

It is important to remember that a student loan program is necessary because a great many of these loans would not be made by banks. A school, looking at 10 marginal students, can make a decision on the basis of a banker and say, "We cannot take any of you." Or they can make it on the basis of an educator and say, "It is our responsibility to help these marginal students get a hold on their lives." Of course the second route is the way we should go. Still, of those 10 marginal students admitted under those circumstances, perhaps 5 of them will not make it. That goes back, I might say, Mr. President, to our failure to pay proper attention to the child at the very beginning, the preschool education. And we know now that neglect of preschool preparation of children causes dropouts, causes inadequate preparation to go on for additional education. Indeed, you might say, our failure to invest adequately in preschool education causes a great deal of the student loan defaults.

So, I do not want to suggest that there is any way in the world to eliminate all of the defaults of people who do not quite make it and then never will have enough money to pay back the loan, but we can get the deadbeats out. We can get a handle on the people who have exploited students out of their educational aid, and that is what my amendment is designed to do.

The legislation as presented in the committee bill disturbed me for a number of reasons. I expressed those reasons last night, and suggested that we could get at the problem in a more direct and intelligent way.

We have now been able to work out the problems in the original bill, and we have done so in a way that will reduce bureaucracy and redtape and that will make the best use of limited resources. The new proposal will also stand the best chance of curbing fraud and abuse in the Student Financial Aid Program. I thank the members of the staff who eagerly cooperated to make this a more workable system of dealing with the problem.

So, Mr. President, I would be perfectly willing, now, to yield back all of my time and to ask the leaders if they care to accept this or if they would like to have a rollcall vote?

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me just 30 seconds?

Mr. SANFORD. Yes.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I cannot help but observe that this institution is a great mix. Here we have a former president of a great university that has stayed the course. He now has an amendment, I think, that is much better than the original amendment. He is putting his background and experience into this amendment. I want to compliment him for what he has done for the Senate today and for higher education and for those students who will be looking for a loan. I wanted that to be part of the record.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PELL. I thank the Senator from Kentucky for his words. I must say I agree with him. I think this proposal offered by Senator SANFORD is an excellent one. In fact, the agreement that has been arrived at is, I think, better than our original proposal.

Under the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina, the role of the State will be defined as that of a watchdog. We want the States to help the Secretary identify the fraudulent or misleading practices that may come to light. We do not want the States to act as a superapproval agency. We want them only to be the eyes and the ears of the Department of Education. This amendment accomplishes that and improves the bill. I know from the viewpoint of this side of the aisle I am pleased to accept it and hope we can do so without a rollcall vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM].

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, we are pleased to accept it on this side of the aisle. I would just express my appreciation to the Senator from North Carolina. Senator SANFORD has really contributed a great deal to helping us come to a compromise, which, I think, is superior to the original proposal in the bill.

Many of us support State licensing. At the same time, we recognize it should be done in a constructive manner that will not become unduly intrusive. I think the Senator's amendment addresses that interest.

I would also particularly like to thank staff on both sides of the aisle, who worked very hard to develop language that is agreeable to all. This amendment is accepted on this side.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, would the Senator from Rhode Island yield me 5 minutes?

Mr. PELL. I yield as much time as he desires to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas controls the time.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. I will be happy to yield the time to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY].

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I, too, want to join in expressing the appreciation of all of us to Senator SANFORD. He, as has been pointed out, was a distinguished president of a great university and has had a wide range of experience in government at the State level, the Federal level, and also at the local level. Even though he has not been a member of our committee, we have benefited greatly from his knowledge and understanding in the areas of higher education, and elementary and secondary education. I think the input he has had in this particular aspect of the legislation is invaluable.

What we have recognized in this legislation, in an attempt to ensure the basic integrity of the Federal role in education, is, first of all, that there is a role for the Federal responsibility, and there is a role for the State, and there is also a private role. The private role is with regard to accreditation and the State role is with regard to licensing institutions. The Federal role is basically to govern eligibility for the individuals who will benefit from student aid programs.

We had attempted in the legislation to strengthen those three prongs in a way that was going to preserve the integrity of the program, because, as has been pointed out during the debate, if we are expending more and more resources in paying off defaults, that means less opportunity for young Americans to take advantage of the various educational programs that are included in this program. We are diverting scarce resources, taxpayers' money, in this way.

As the Senator pointed out, this is a balance. What will undermine the whole integrity of the framework is the fly-by-night kind of proprietary institutions which bilked the Federal Government out of resources and misused and abused young Americans who were attempting to acquire skills to be able to become productive members of the economy.

Our committee over a period of time has been trying to address that particular issue respecting the different roles of the different parties. We attempted to tighten up over a year ago in this measure, and we continue in this legislation to address this issue.

Senator NUNN and his investigative committee had a series of hearings on this issue, and this legislation reflects many of the recommendations of his committee. We have been very grateful to him. But I think Senator TERRY SANFORD has appropriately reviewed the composite of these various forces and factors and has been able to weigh them from a particular viewpoint which was very, very helpful and enormously valuable to us in shaping this legislation in this area, as in other areas.

So I want to thank the Senator for all of the time and the effort and the energy that he put into this proposal. I believe it is clearly superior to the way we were moving. It demonstrates again what I think all of us understand, which is the value of these kinds of exchanges and discussion. So we are very grateful to him, and I join with our colleagues and urge the Senate to accept this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the offerer of the amendment yielded his time back?

Mr. SANFORD. I yield my time back, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is all time yielded back?

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. All time is yielded back on this side, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All time is yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SANFORD].

The amendment (No. 1695) was agreed to.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1696

(Purpose: To provide for reallocation of funds under part E of title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965)

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. PRYOR] I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL] for Mr. PRYOR, proposes an amendment numbered 1696.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 225, between lines 11 and 12, insert the following:

SEC. . ALLOCATION OF FUNDS.

Subsection (j) of section 462 of the Act (20 U.S.C. 1087bb(j)) is amended to read as follows:

"(j) REALLOCATION OF EXCESS ALLOCATIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If an institution returns to the Secretary any portion of the sums allocated to such institution under this section for any fiscal year, the Secretary shall reallocate such excess to eligible institutions which were participants in the program in fiscal year 1985 but which did not receive an allocation under subsection (a), an amount equal to those institutions' excess eligible amounts as determined under paragraph (2) multiplied by the institution's default penalty, as determined under subsection (f), except that—

"(A) if the institution has a default rate in excess of the applicable maximum default rate under subsection (g), the institution may not receive an allocation under this subparagraph; and

"(B) except that the reallocation to an institution shall not exceed such institution's eligible amount (as determined under paragraph (3) of subsection (c)).

"(2) For any eligible institution, the excess eligible amount is the amount, if any, by which—

"(A)(i) that institution's eligible amount (as determined under paragraph (3) of subsection (c)), divided by (ii) the sum of the eligible amounts of all institutions described in paragraph (1) (as determined under paragraph (3)), multiplied by (iii) the amount of funds available for reallocation under this subsection; exceeds

"(B) the amount required to be allocated to that institution under subsection (c) of section 462.

"(3) From the remainder of such excess, the Secretary shall reallocate the remainder, in accordance with regulations, to eligible institutions which did not return to the Secretary any portion of the sums allocated to such institution.".

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I am pleased to be offering an amendment to the Higher Education Reauthorization Act which will address an inequity which I believe presently exists in the Perkins loan program. This inequity is depriving students of vitally needed financial aide funds at six higher education institutions in my State and at one or more institutions in every State in the Union. This amendment will not require the allocation of any additional Federal funds above what is already specified in the bill, it does not violate the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990, and it does not take money away from the amounts schools currently expect to receive under the Perkins program. My amendment is based on the simple premise that the guests at dinner shouldn't get a second helping until everyone at the table has gotten a first serving.

Currently, most post-secondary institutions have a Perkins revolving loan fund out of which they make loans to financially needy students. The moneys loaned out of the fund are collected by the school over a period of years after the student graduates, and then loaned out to other eligible students—thus the revolving nature of the program.

Under current law, the Federal Government makes a small annual supplement, or capital contribution, to the Perkins fund of most institutions, in an effort to replace moneys dissipated by defaults and other net losses. The formula used to allocate these Federal capital contributions contains a hold harmless, however, which bases the amount of the current contribution on the amount of the contribution received by the school for the 1985–86 school year. Schools which did not receive a contribution during that year, for whatever reason, have been unable to obtain a Federal capital contribution for the past several years.

As I indicated, in my State six institutions have been excluded from receiving a Federal capital contribution because of this hold harmless. One of these schools, Henderson State University, did not receive a Federal contribution in the 1985–86 school year because its enrollment was declining at the time, and the amount of money it was collecting from students repaying their Perkins loans was more than enough to cover the demands of new students seeking Perkins loans. As a matter of fact, Henderson eventually returned almost $1.5 million in excess Perkins loan funds to the Department of Education because loan repayments were more than covering new loan demand. Now, however, enrollment is on the rise at Henderson State and Perkins loan demand has increased, but the repayment of outstanding loans is insufficient to cover the new loan demand and the school is unable to get an additional Federal capital contribution because it did not receive one during the 1985–86 base year.

This amendment will correct the problem at Henderson and at the 300 odd institutions across the country which are in similar circumstances. This amendment does not eliminate the hold harmless, and it will not reduce the amount of the Federal capital contribution currently expected by needy institutions. Instead, the amendment takes Federal capital contributions which are currently returned to the Department of Education by schools which do not need them in a given year, and redistributes them on a priority basis to those schools which currently receive no allocation because they received none in the 1985–86 base year. Currently, the Secretary of Education requires schools which do not receive a contribution to compete for these returned funds on an equal footing with schools that have already received a Federal capital contribution.

Again, my amendment is based on a fairly simple principle of equity: Those schools which are excluded from receiving a Federal capital contribution in the initial distribution of funds ought to have an opportunity to receive a portion of returned excess funds before those schools which have already received a contribution get a second crack at the money. My amendment accomplishes this goal by distributing these returned funds to the excluded schools in proportion to their relative need and with a default factor figured in which effectively rewards low default schools with larger allocations. Any funds left over after the distribution to the excluded group of schools are available for distribution to those schools which did receive initial allocations.

Mr. President, I believe this is a very reasonable proposal for bringing some equity to the distribution of Perkins Federal capital contributions without upsetting our current system for distributing these moneys or depriving schools currently in the program of the contributions they expect.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, this amendment has been agreed to on both sides. Accordingly, I urge its adoption, and I yield back any time that I have.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, the amendment has been cleared on our side, and we support it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All time has been yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1696) was agreed to.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NEIGHBORHOOD SCHOOLS IMPROVEMENT ACT—S. 2

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the clerk be instructed to print additional copies of S. 2, the Neighborhood Schools Improvement Act as it was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? There is no objection. It is so ordered.

HIGHER EDUCATION AMENDMENTS

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum for just a few moments before we go to final passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of no quorum having been suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, this bill that we are about to approve is excellent legislation. It continues the Federal commitment to educational opportunity and access in postsecondary education. It is a commitment unexcelled in any other nation in the world. We may sometimes fall short in fulfilling it, but there can be no doubt about our intentions. This bill is an important reaffirmation of that commitment, and it contains some remarkable achievements. Stronger student aid programs, more help for needy students, new help for hard-pressed middle-income families, a simplified application process, new and better programs for the teaching profession—these are but a few of the major achievements of this legislation.

But let me make something clear. While we have built what I believe is a strong and good foundation, we must add the full funding that will bring reality to the promises we have made. Money is the cement that will hold the bricks together and make what we have constructed sound and strong.

Before we conclude, however, I think it important that we acknowledge those who devoted extraordinary time and effort to putting this important bill together.

First, I want to thank the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] for his strong and immense help in getting this bill passed. Second, I want to thank Mark Sigurski, our legislative counsel. We are indebted to him for his hard work, his patience, and his ability to withstand our many demands. Third, I want to thank the staff of my colleagues on the Education Subcommittee and the full Labor and Human Resources Committee. In particular, I want to thank Susan Hattan and Lisa Ross from Senator KASSEBAUM's staff, Terry Hartle and Suzanne Ramos from Senator KENNEDY's staff, and Laurie Chivers from Senator HATCH's staff. They have all done well and we are in their debt.

I want to express my appreciation for the superior work done by David Evans owr staff director and by Jason Hendler, Michael Dannenberg, and Peter Gill of my staff on the Education Subcommittee. Without their efforts, this bill would not have become a reality. But most especially, I want to thank Sarah Flanagan, the professional staff member for postsecondary education on the subcommittee staff. Her knowledge of the student aid process has been indispensable, and her hard work, attention to detail, and persistence have been invaluable, and this attention to detail and persistence was still being demonstrated as of 3 o'clock this morning as she put together the Sanford compromise.

Fifth, I want to thank the administration. They have been players from the outset, and we have taken their recommendations seriously. Secretary Alexander, Assistant Secretary Carolyn Reid-Wallace, Assistant Secretary Bob Okun, and all the involved staff are to be commended.

Finally, I want to thank my colleagues on the subcommittee, the full committee and in the Senate as a whole. We continue with passage of this legislation the strong bipartisan consensus that has dominated education in the Senate since I first served on the subcommittee over 20 years ago. Without that consensus, that bipartisan approach, we would have been unable to fashion this legislation and to pass it in such an expeditious manner.

In this regard, I would like to pay tribute to my ranking minority Members through the years who have been building bricks as we move ahead: Senator Dominick, Senator Javits, Senator Stafford, and others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate is taking final action on S. 1150. As I noted yesterday, I believe this is a strong piece of legislation. I would just like to add that I, too, believe that bipartisanship on the issue of education has served us well. We have had many hearings on the higher education reauthorization legislation. We have spent over a year putting this together, and I think that we have really worked hard to advance some goals that we all share. My particular appreciation to the chairman of the subcommittee, Senator PELL, as well as to Senators HATCH and KENNEDY for their efforts on behalf of this bill.

Much has already been said about the importance of this legislation. I would like to mention once again my appreciation for some of the same staff members that Senator PELL mentioned, because I think we all realize we could not put legislation like this together without the support of staff.

I would particularly like to, of course, thank my own staff, Susan Hattan, Lisa Ross, and Sondra Nickel. The full list of staff follows my remarks but Laurie Chivers and Corine Larson of Senator HATCH's staff and certainly David Evans, Sarah Flanagan, and Terry Hartle on the Democratic side have been of invaluable assistance.

I also appreciate the work and assistance provided by Secretary Lamar Alexander and staff of the Department of Education.

Finally, we all owe a special debt of gratitude to Mark Sigurski of the Office of Legislative Counsel, who has spent countless hours in the drafting of this legislation.

Staff contributing to S. 1150: Susan Hattan, Lisa Ross, and Sondra Nickel with Senator KASSEBAUM; Laurie Chivers and Corine Larson with Senator HATCH; David Evans, Sarah Flanagan, Jason Hendler, and Michael Dannenberg with Senator PELL; Terry Hartle, Suzanne Ramos, Rusty Barbour, and Dan Ivey-Soto with Senator KENNEDY; Sharon Soderstrom with Senator COATS; Doris Dixon with Senator COCHRAN; Pam Kruse with Senator JEFFORDS; Kent Talbert with Senator THURMOND; Rolf Lund with Senator DURENBERGER; Adele Robinson with Senator ADAMS; Ray Ramirez with Senator BINGAMAN; Joan Gilman and Suzanne Day with Senator DODD; Bev Schroeder with Senator HARKIN; Cheryl Birdsall with Senator METZENBAUM; Anita Harewood with Senator MIKULSKI; Bob Shireman and Brian Kennedy with Senator SIMON; and Mike Epstein with Senator WELLSTONE.

Finally, I also appreciate the work and assistance provided by Secretary Lamar Alexander and staff of the Department of Education.

As mentioned by Senator PELL, Mark Sigurski, in the Office of Legislative Counsel, has provided some invaluable assistance. I think we often forget that the details of the legislation can be extremely difficult and complicated, and to have to work under such pressure requires a great deal of patience and concentration.

Mr. President, I think we are ready to go to final passage.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN] is recognized.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I am convinced that one of our greatest national assets is our college and university system. People come from all over the world to study in American universities not only because they are accessible but because in many cases they are the best in the world. I am pleased to support this legislation because it will help guarantee even greater access in the years ahead to our institutions of higher learning.

This bill was developed over a period of months with bipartisan cooperation among members of the Committee on Labor and Human Resources. I commend Senator PELL and Senator KASSEBAUM, as well as Senators KENNEDY and HATCH, for the manner in which this bill was developed.

The committee has done important work on Federal higher education programs, making them more responsive to the challenge we face.

The assurance of access to postsecondary education, and the opportunities it provides, is the most important aspect of this legislation.

Grant aid has been increased for students most in need, by increasing Pell grant maximum awards, by making the Pell grant award formula more realistic in terms of the actual costs of attending an institution of higher education, by directing the supplemental grant to the lowest income students, and by authorizing a new scholarship for students from economically disadvantaged families. This scholarship will also provide these students with an incentive to excel academically because eligibility is dependent upon a student's having completed a rigorous core curriculum in high school.

Middle-income families are provided with greater access to student aid by eliminating farm and home equity for families with incomes below $50,000 from the calculation used to determine a student's eligibility for financial assistance. Another provision of this bill will extend eligibility for supplemental loans for students to dependent students, thus increasing the options for middle-income students and their families.

Increases in Pell grant maximums will mean that the poorest students will be required to borrow less to round out their financial aid package. Increases in annual borrowing limits for federally subsidized loans will particularly help middle-income students. Loan limits have also been increased in the unsubsidized loan programs for students with greater family resources.

I am pleased that the committee was able to simplify financial aid programs for students and families by creating one need analysis system for all grant and loan programs, by ensuring a free, common Federal application form, and by streamlining both the application and reapplication process for needy students.

We have improved outreach, early intervention, and support services for low-income and educationally disadvantaged students, so that more of those students can go to college and succeed there.

Mr. President, guaranteed student loan defaults are expected to reach an alltime high of $3.6 billion this year and pose a major threat to the stability and integrity of student aid in general. Serious questions have been raised about the program's effectiveness as the primary vehicle for federally supported student assistance.

With provisions in this bill, we have attempted to assure the integrity of the student aid programs. Steps have been taken to improve the standards for institutional participation in the programs.

Accrediting agencies, the States, and the Federal Government must all do a better job in assuring program quality and institutional capability.

We have also taken steps to reduce the number and costs of loan defaults. In addition to continuing and strengthening the default control provisions of the 1989 and 1990 budget reconciliation laws, we have included new provisions to strengthen further the incentives for all parties, lenders as well as schools, to reduce defaults and improve collections on defaulted loans.

Mr. President, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, I can speak firsthand to the frustration of having to devote precious resources to default costs, rather than to expanded aid to students.

The bill establishes much needed academies for teachers and school leaders to help them do a better job in the classroom.

Alternative certification demonstration grants are authorized to allow States to experiment with bringing teachers into the classroom that may have an expertise that makes them valuable but who have not been certified by traditional certification requirements.

Mr. President, I am pleased that provisions which would have triggered a veto on this bill were withdrawn. Support for education enjoys wide bipartisan support in Congress. This is a good bill and I urge the Senate to approve it.

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN). The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] is recognized.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I thank you very much.

May I ask one or two questions of the managers of the bill? I want to make sure that my understanding about certain aspects is correct. Is it accurate—let me put it another way. What additional budget authority does this bill propose? The figure I have is $56.9 billion.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. That will be over 5 years.

Mr. HELMS. I understand. It is still $56.9 billion.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. I think the cost is about $17 billion in the first year. I cannot tell you how much additional funds are involved, but it reflects, of course, the increase in student grants plus the additional authorizations which have always been higher than the appropriations. Because most of the bill is subject to appropriations, I cannot say accurately how much additional outlay it will involve.

Mr. HELMS. That leads to my next question. What would the proposed outlays be as proposed? My figure is $42.7 billion over a period of 5 years.

Mr. PELL. In direct spending, I understand there is a saving of $335 million in savings over the 5-year period.

Mr. HELMS. That is $335 million?

Mr. PELL. Million dollars. We are talking about millions, not billions.

Mr. HELMS. A million is a pittance around this place.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I just want to add that we now spend $11 billion in higher education. So, if one factors that out over 5 years, yes, that is the figure we have. So we are spending that now.

Mr. HELMS. I understand, but this bill still proposes additional spending in the $50-billion range.

Mr. President, a lot of things are painful to vote against around this place, but I think it was Davy Crockett, as a Member of the House of Representatives, who on one occasion pointed out to his colleagues that it was not their money they were spending; it was the people's money.

I will ask one further question. Is my understanding correct that the Federal debt is now approaching 4 trillion dollars?

Mr. PELL. I believe that is correct. I do not know for sure.

Mr. HELMS. The point is this, Mr. President, as of 2 days ago, February 19, the exact Federal debt, down to the penny, stood at $3,820,046,156,792.02. That debt represents the irresponsibility of the Congress of the United States for decades in spending the taxpayers' money far in excess of the Government's income.

This bill, which the Senate is about to approve overwhelmingly, proposes additional—additional—budget authority of $56.9 billion and additional outlays of $42.7 billion.

Mr. President, what are we doing to the American people when Congress engages in such reckless spending? What about the young people who in just a few years will inherit this economic nightmare? Does any other Senator share my dismay at the debt we are piling on the shoulders of Americans of all ages, and particularly the next generation of taxpayers?

The American taxpayers were forced to provide $286.02 billion during the past 12 months just to pay the interest on the existing national debt, to which this bill will add billions of dollars. According to my calculations, that comes to $5.5 billion every week—just to pay the interest alone.

I may be the only Senator voting against this bill today, but vote against it I must. And I shall continue to vote against such bloated proposals which will serve to run up the Federal debt even further.

It is the Congress of the United States that has created the economic crisis that is today on the minds of the American people. Politicians who like to point fingers should point to themselves.

I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BUMPERS. Will the Senator withhold?

Mr. PELL. Yes.

Mr. BUMPERS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS] is recognized.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I rise to discuss the teacher training provisions of the Higher Education Act reauthorization and to reiterate assurances I received last night from the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Rhode Island about the operation of the State and national teacher academies. I received assurances that the teacher academies in S. 1150 would be open to teachers of all disciplines so that a math or science teacher could attend a seminar in the humanities, or a history teacher could attend an English seminar.

I strongly supported the National Teacher Act of 1990 and was disappointed when that bill died at the end of the 101st Congress. That legislation included provisions that reflected many of my ideas about the professional development and in-service training of classroom teachers, ideas expressed in the humanities excellence and teacher education bill which I have introduced every Congress since the 98th. In my view, the teacher education provisions of S. 1150 are even stronger than those in the National Teacher Act, and I heartily endorse it.

I first testified before the Subcommittee on Education, Humanities, and the Arts regarding my humanities excellence and education bill when Senator Stafford chaired the subcommittee, and since that time I have worked with the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Massachusetts to advance the idea of a comprehensive program of professional development for classroom teachers.

I am convinced that the improvement of American schools depends on recruiting and retaining a strong corps of teachers and providing the current corps of teachers the opportunity to develop and improve their teaching skills. For the last several Congresses, I have introduced legislation which would establish a comprehensive program of summer seminars in the humanities. The program I propose is, quite frankly, an expanded and slightly modified version of the summer seminar program at the National Endowment for the Humanities.

The outstanding program administered by the NEH includes dozens of seminars each summer which serve hundreds of teachers. I fight every year to increase funding for that program, but it still remains only a fraction of the size it should be. If budget constraints were not so severe, American teachers should be able to take advantage of professional development opportunities each summer.

I propose an extensive program of summer seminars in the humanities, with an authorization which would allow at least one seminar in each State. While the subject matter of the seminars would be concentrated on the humanities, I propose that any teacher—whether a teacher of the humanities, math, science, or foreign languages—have the opportunity to attend these seminars.

I believe that, while we have begun to address the problems of math and science instruction, we have done little to improve instruction in the humanities. the indicators of this trend are many—our students perform poorly on history examinations, their reading and writing skills are weak, and their knowledge of our own political and cultural institutions is weak. And the committee report on S. 1150 indicates that the supply of humanities Ph.D.'s is dwindling. I would suggest that the limited number of young people interested in pursuing higher degrees in the humanities is a pipeline problem: Students receive inadequate or uninspired instruction in the humanities and are not interested in pursuing advanced training in those disciplines.

I am very pleased that S. 1150 includes a comprehensive program of State academies for teachers and school leaders, professional development academies, and national teacher academies. The professional development opportunities that will be provided by these academies are sorely needed, and I applaud the committee for including such a strong program in S. 1150. The teacher academies are not structured exactly like the seminars I propose in my legislation, but the intent and structure are very similar.

The teacher academies aim to improve subject matter skills for teachers in certain key areas: English, mathematics, science, history, geography, foreign languages, and civics and government. The bill specifically states that the States are to insure that 70 percent of the funds that are available for the teacher academies will be used for the enhancement of knowledge in the key academic subjects, and 20 percent of the funds will be used for enhancement of participant knowledge in areas not related to academic subjects. I certainly understand the committee's interest in improving subject matter skills and insuring that our history, science, mathematics, and other teachers are prepared to teach their subjects, but I also want to reiterate that teachers can attend seminars outside their discipline.

The bill gives the States, which will administer the State teacher academies, and the U.S. Department of Education, which will administer the national teacher academies, flexibility in choosing teachers to participate in the seminars. I received assurances from the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Rhode Island that the bill intends that flexibility to allow math and science teachers, for example, to attend seminars in history, English, or civics and government. As they noted, there are real benefits to be gained from the cross-fertilization that occurs when teachers receive instruction outside their discipline and learn beside teachers of other disciplines.

S. 1150 includes a special provision allowing proposals for academies that would provide for training in two or more academic subjects at a single site. I would urge that cross-disciplinary training not only be allowed but that it be encouraged. This is one more way to improve humanities instruction and reach more teachers.

I hope this bill will move quickly through conference, and I will work to see that the Teacher Academy Program is funded in this fiscal year. It has been said several times during consideration of this legislation that we cannot afford to delay action on this bill, and I agree that our current teacher corps cannot be neglected any longer. Our schools, our children, and our future depend on them. I will work to see that the Teacher Academy Program is funded and I will monitor its administration to insure that enrollment in the seminars across disciplines is allowed.

Mr. President, I would like to take a few more minutes to comment on the other teacher training provisions of S. 1150 which are aimed at recruiting highly qualified individuals to teaching and training new teachers. I am particularly pleased that the Teacher Corps Program has been reinstituted.

The concept of providing scholarship assistance to teacher candidates in return for service in schools that have shortages of teachers or shortages in certain subject areas is a concept that has worked very well in other disciplines. For example, we have improved health care delivery in underserved areas through the national Health Service Corps, and the model will serve us well in the education area. Not only will teacher shortages be addressed, but teacher candidates will receive important teacher training through the Teacher Corps Program.

The committee has also been thoughtful in drafting provisions to improve the recruitment of minority teachers. It is wise to encourage the activities of local and State educational agencies, higher education institutions with substantial concentrations of minority students, and consortia of higher education institutions to improve minority teacher recruitment. The shortage of minority teachers must be addressed. The public school enrollment is almost one-third minority, yet the teaching force is only a 10th minority. There is a clear need for teachers who can serve as role models for young minority students, and this bill begins to address that need.

The teacher recruitment and training provisions are very important, and I am pleased that the committee has done such an outstanding job on that part of the bill. These provisions are particularly important because of estimates that about 2.5 million public and private school teachers may have to be hired in the 1990's.

Mr. President, I am pleased to lend my support to S. 1150 and I will work for funding and implementation of the teacher training programs.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] is recognized.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, we have finished consideration of one of the most important pieces of legislation to come before Congress in this session. The Higher Education Reauthorization Act represents our investment in the future productivity of this Nation. This bill will provide millions of students with the financial support necessary to pursue a college education and achieve their greatest potential.

One of the central goals of this legislation was to increase access to higher education for all Americans. We have accomplished this by authorizing a long-overdue increase in the Pell Grant Program, the cornerstone of the Federal Student Aid Program and by raising limits on college loans. Both of these changes will help hard-working middle-income families keep up with the rising cost of tuition. With support from the Federal Government, these families will be able to realize their dream of providing a college education to their children.

Another key provision is the establishment of the ACCESS Program. This program focuses on helping disadvantaged students overcome obstacles to finishing high school and entering college. With the help of early invention programs and the promise of a scholarship, many needy youth who might otherwise drop out of school will now be able to pursue a college education. As the "I Have a Dream" initiative has proved so dramatically, students who know that a college education is within their reach financially are more likely to be motivated to finish high school and perform well.

Another key accomplishment of this legislation is the simplification of the student aid application process. By establishing a single needs formula and mandating a simplified single application form, we have taken much of the confusion out of the student aid application process. These changes, in combination with automatic eligibility for the neediest students, will make it much easier for students to obtain the financial aid they are entitled to receive.

Finally, we have made significant progress toward ending fraud and abuse in the Student Loan Program. We have tightened the approval process that schools must go through in order to gain entry into the Federal Student Aid Program and we have implemented several of the recommendations in Senator NUNN's excellent report on curbing fraud and abuse. These changes will help us guarantee that Federal funds are providing students with a beneficial education.

We are particularly pleased that we have been able to complete work on this monumental legislation in a bipartisan fashion in less than 1 day on the Senate floor. It is vitally important to all Americans that this reauthorization bill be completed and enacted into law at the earliest opportunity. As I stated yesterday, Senator BRADLEY, Senator BENTSEN, Senator SIMON, Senator DURENBERGER, and I have been working intensively over the last several days to put together an amendment to provide direct loans to students for higher education and we made great progress in reaching an accord on this important new direction for student loans. All of us are deeply committed to seeing a direct loan demonstration program enacted into law this year. At this point, however, it was not possible to obtain bipartisan agreement on a demonstration program and rather than delay final passage of the higher education bill we decided to seek to move the direct lending initiative on another vehicle at the earliest possible opportunity. Again I am very pleased that we have been able to move this bill so promptly.

Senator MITCHELL indicated yesterday he had expected this important measure to consume up to 4 days of floor time. The fact that we were able to take care of so many amendments by bipartisan agreement undoubtedly has resulted in a much stronger bill than if we had stayed on the floor dealing with contentious issues for 4 days.

The reauthorization of the Higher Education Act has given us the opportunity to greatly strengthen our current higher education system. By increasing the Pell grant, raising loan limits, and simplifying the application process, we have greatly expanded access to a college education for millions of American students. The student aid investment which we are making today will help our hard working families realize their dream of fully educating their children and helping them achieve their greatest potential. And this investment will be repaid many times over in the future productivity and competitiveness of this Nation.

Mr. President, at this point, I would like to thank the staffers who helped us reach this point: Senator PELL: David Evans, Sarah Flanagan, Michael Dannenberg, and Jason Hendler; Senator KASSEBAUM: Susan Hattan, Lisa Ross, and Sondra Nickel; Senator HATCH: Laurie Chivers and Corine Larson; Senator METZENBAUM: Cheryl Birdsall; Senator SIMON: Bob Shireman and Brian Kennedy; Senator HARKIN: Bev Schroeder; Senator ADAMS: Adele Robinson; Senator MIKULSKI: Anita Harewood; Senator BINGAMAN: Ray Ramirez; Senator WELLSTONE: Mike Epstein; Senator JEFFORDS: Pam Kruse; Senator DODD: Joan Gilman and Suzanne Day; Senator COATS: Sharon Soderstrom; Senator THURMOND: Kent Talbert; Senator DURENBERGER: Alexander Polinsky, Rolf Lund, and Annie Silberman; Senator COCHRAN: Doris Dixon; and from my own staff: Suzanne Ramos, Rusty Barbour, Terry Hartle, Joe Murray, Tom Clyde, Daniel Ivey-Soto, and Katherine Herrera.

I would also like to pay a special tribute to Mark Sigurski of the Legislative Counsel's Office. This huge bill—750 pages—and all the amendments were drafted by Mr. Sigurski. He worked with dispatch, demonstrated great technical skill and infallible patience. All of us are in his debt for a job well done.

AMENDMENT NO. 1697

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I send to the desk a technical amendment which has been agreed to on both sides and ask it be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL] proposes an amendment numbered 1697.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

"SEC. 126. STUDENT LITERACY CORPS PROGRAM.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—From the amount reserved pursuant to section 131(b) for any fiscal year, the Secretary is authorized, in accordance with the provisions of this subpart, to make grants to institutions of higher education for not more than 3 years to pay for the Federal share to carry out student literacy corps programs.

"(1) FIRST YEAR.—No institution of higher education may expend more than $50,000 of a grant made under this subpart in the first year in which the institution receives such a grant.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, we urge adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1697) was agreed to.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I would like to discuss an amendment with the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts regarding students who are enrolled in college on a part-time basis to help facilitate the President's goal of encouraging lifelong learning.

At the present time, students must be enrolled in postsecondary education on at least a half-time basis to participate in the Federal Student Aid Programs. This usually means that individuals must take at least two courses to be eligible for assistance. The administration has asked that we extend eligibility to students who study on less than a half-time basis. They note, correctly in my estimation, that the lack of financial resources makes it hard for some students who must attend college on a limited basis to meet tuition bills.

The request to extend eligibility to part-time students does have cost implications and that is a problem on this bill. I would like to ask my friend from Massachusetts if he would be willing to keep looking at this issue to see if we cannot find a way to address it.

Mr. KENNEDY. I appreciate the Senator's question. As the Senator knows, this bill extends Pell grant eligibility to students who study on less than a half-time basis. In addition, we have taken steps to ensure that part-time students receive a greater share of the funds distributed under the campus-based programs. The legislation does not expand eligibility in the Guaranteed Student Loan Program to these students as the administration has requested and it would be impossible for us to accommodate that request at present because, according to the Congressional Budget Office, our bill just meets the paygo provisions of the Budget Enforcement Act. If we adopt the administration's request, we will be in violation of the Budget Enforcement Act. As a result, I do not see how we can address the request at this time. We may, however, be able to address that issue during conference.

I have, however, met with Secretary Alexander about this issue and have assured him that I am deeply interested in this issue and would be happy to keep working on it with him. I might add that I am grateful for the Secretary's deep interest in this issue. As Senator HATCH knows, there has been a provision in the Pell Grant Program for aid to less than part-time students that has only been funded once in the last 6 years—largely because the Department of Education opposed the provision. I am grateful for Secretary Alexander's commitment to the needs of these students.

Mr. HATCH. I wish to thank the Senator for his comments. I will look forward to working with him and with the Secretary of Education to address this issue as this bill continues to move through the legislative process.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the Senate-passed version of the current year appropriation bill for the Department of Education includes an amendment I authored that prevents the Department from initiating or continuing proceedings that would classify as correspondence study telecommunications delivered courses of instruction offered by accredited colleges and universities that lead to recognized degrees pending reauthorization of the Higher Education Act of 1965. I offered my amendment only after consulting with the staff of the Labor and Human Resources Subcommittee on Education, Arts and the Humanities.

I offered the amendment with encouragement from Portland Community College, the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges and America's Public Television Stations because I believe that telecommunications is a highly effective, efficient and economical way to deliver quality educational services. Students enrolled in such courses should be guaranteed access to full financial aid. Hundreds of accredited higher education institutions employ telecommunications to extend the reach of their campuses. Telecommunications delivery brings the institution to the student, particularly in sparsely populated rural and remote areas of the country, including portions of Oregon, but equally in urban areas as well. Joining in support of the amendment was an ad hoc national coalition of more than 70 colleges, universities, and associations.

Subsequent to my amendment, the House Labor and Education Committee reported its version of the higher education reauthorization bill. It includes language that clarifies that telecommunications delivered courses of instruction offered by accredited institutions and leading to a recognized degree is regular, not correspondence, instruction for the purpose of calculating financial aid eligibility. I support the House language but note that the bill reported by the Labor and Human Resources Committee does not include the same or similar language.

Mr. President, with this background I would like to engage in a colloquy with the chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee and the chairman of the Subcommittee on Education, Arts, and the Humanities.

Am I correct in my understanding that the committee and subcommittee chairmen believe that telecommunications delivered courses of instruction offered by accredited colleges and universities and leading to a recognized degree is regular instruction for financial aid purposes?

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator from Oregon is correct. I have previously stated that students receiving such instruction are entitled to full financial aid. I have also stated that I would work to clarify the matter during reauthorization of the Higher Education Act. I reiterate my commitment today.

The Senator from Oregon is correct that S. 1150 does not include the House committee's provision. It is not incorporated because I believe it may not go far enough to protect the opportunities of students enrolled in institutions such as community colleges. Therefore, I want to assure my distinguished colleague that I will work closely with the chairman of the Education, Arts and the Humanities Subcommittee and with the chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee during conference to be sure that the final language leaves no doubt as to the intent of Congress that students enrolled in all courses accepted for credit by institutions such as community colleges are entitled to full financial aid.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I, too, would like to assure the distinguished Senator from Oregon of my commitment to guarantee that students enrolled in various types of courses of instruction that lead to recognized degrees are entitled to full financial aid. This is an important national policy issue. But it is particularly important to me since the Community College of Rhode Island uses telecommunications to extend its campus to the people of my State.

I will work closely in conference with the chairmen of the Labor and Human Resources Committee and the Education and Labor Committee to ensure that the final bill clarifies the instruction status of telecommunications instruction.

Mr. HATFIELD. I thank the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts and the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island for their statements and commitments. I would welcome the opportunity to assist them in guaranteeing that telecommunications based students receive full financial aid.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise today in strong support of the Higher Education Act.

Mr. President, this bill is a chance to win one of the first battles in the war for America's future. It is a brave and firm step forward toward helping working families send their kids to college. And, Mr. President, middle-class families deserve that help.

These are hard working people who are willing to do their part. But their part may be just too hard to do right now. The middle class has no more to give. They're tuition poor and they're mortgage poor.

Let's face it, when you are making a middle level income and you are paying college tuition for three kids, you're strapped. Far too often, middle-class parents do not qualify for financial aid. Right now, the Government punishes those parents for owning a home or saving money. That is not right.

Let us give help to those who practice self help. If you get there and save your money, you deserve a break.

Everyone in America should be able to get ahead based on their own hard work and ability. The Government should help that happen.

I am sure going to try my best to see that it does.

Mr. President, I introduced a bill in the last session called the Working Families Cost Relief Act to help these families achieve their dreams. The bill we are considering today goes a long way toward reaching that goal.

We have expanded access to financial aid for those middle class families who cannot afford to send their kids to the college of their choice.

We have increased Pell grant awards.

We have simplified the financial aid forms.

And we have made it easier to get aid for families who may have all their assets tied up in a home or farm.

Senator PELL, Senator KENNEDY, and others have worked hard to bring a bill to the floor that makes it a little easier for American families to help their children achieve their dreams. I am proud to be a part of that effort.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, passage of the Reauthorization of the Higher Education Act is a critical step in ensuring that all Americans have access to higher education, regardless of their background or income level. The central role of education in an increasingly competitive global economy is crystal clear. To be part of the workforce in the year 2000, Americans must set their educational sights high and utilize flexible and innovative means to reach their goals. In the workplace of the future, a large segment of our population will have to master the math, engineering, computer, and physics applications that only higher education can provide. We cannot allow income limitations to preclude a young person from realizing his or her potential.

S. 1150 represents the second legislative effort this body will undertake in as many months to address the educational crises facing our Nation. In January, the Senate approved S. 2, the Neighborhood Schools Improvement Act, comprehensive legislation that will foster radical change in our elementary and secondary schools and improve the education we provide to children nationwide. But S. 2 represents only the beginning in our efforts to build an education system that truly prepares our children for the future in a highly complex, technological society.

S. 1150 improves educational access for all Americans. This bill is absolutely necessary to redress the damage that a decade of attacks and underfunding by the Reagan and Bush administrations have inflicted on our students, their families, and our productivity as a nation.

This shortsighted failure to invest in better student aid, institutional support, and higher education programs, is nothing less than a blow to our national security. It is a problem that cannot be ignored and a trend that we can reverse through passage of this legislation. If we fail to do so, if we continue to undervalue the economic benefits of education and training for all citizens, what hope do we have for a strong, viable economy in the year 2000 and beyond?

As I have said many times before, it is time for a reinvestment in education today as we have invested in bombers, missile systems and aircraft carriers in the past. We must recognize that our supercomputers and satellites are empty without qualified graduates to guide them. We must recognize the importance of this legislation to our future productivity and viability as a nation.

Thus, I rise in strong support of S. 1150 and its long-overdue improvements in Federal support for higher education and expansions in student aid. The legislation we consider today will provide low- and middle-income families the educational assistance they were too often denied in the 1980's. There are many important provisions in S. 1150 that achieve this goal: the increase in Pell grant levels, the increased availability of grants and loans, the simplification of student aid, and the investment in the infrastructure of our colleges and universities. I will not address each here.

However, I would like to point out that this legislation is particularly important to farmers and families who may own a family or farm house, but have insufficient income to pay for their children's education. Because of equity calculations that include the farm or the house, these families have been shut out of both grant and loan programs that had been designed to include them in years past. S. 1150 exempts from those calculations a family's farm or principal residence for families with incomes under $50,000. This provision, in combination with others in the bill, will provide desperately needed student aid to a great number of deserving families in South Dakota and across the country. I am pleased to have cosponsored similar legislation in the past and look forward to enacting this measure in short order.

One provision I would like to express concern about is the title V program funding for State Academies for Educators, formerly known as the LEAD Program. S. 1150 contains an authorization level of only $132 million for this program, which has proven to be a very useful and important program in my State. The comparable House provision authorizes $400 million for what is essentially the same program. I have been advised of the committee's willingness to move toward the House figure for this program, and I would urge them at this time to consider accepting the House figure in total. I have heard more positive comments about this program than almost any other Federal higher education program we fund. Educators, administrators and teachers alike understand the value of this program, and it should be funded at a viable level.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I would like to congratulate the bill's sponsors for their hard work in bringing this bill to the floor, and I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of the legislation.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I join in the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts. This is an important bill. I want to personally pay tribute to the chairman and the ranking minority member of this subcommittee for the energetic and good work they have done on this bill. It has been very difficult to put together in a way that is acceptable to a vast majority of the Members of this body. So I am very happy with the cooperative effort of this body of consider this bill to resolve a variety of very, very tough issues. I think the speed with which we have passed this bill speaks well for the Education Subcommittee and its staff. It has been a bipartisan effort for the most part, as I think most our education bills have been, and it is one I think the administration can support.

We are also in an excellent position now as we move toward conference on this bill. That is important, too. It is a good bill and one that will benefit students all over the country, and certainly in my home State of Utah, while ensuring tax dollars are put to their best use.

Again I would like to thank Senators KASSEBAUM, KENNEDY, PELL, Secretary Alexander, and their staffs for their cooperation and leadership in this matter, and I personally would like to thank the members of my staff who have worked so long and diligently on this matter, and express to them how much I appreciate the long hours and the great efforts that they have made in helping to bring about this bill.

Mr. President, I think we are ready for final passage.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH ON COLLEGE CAMPUSES

Mr. CRAIG. Would the chairman yield to enter into a colloquy concerning the subject of freedom of speech on college campuses?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield to the Senator from Idaho for that purpose.

Mr. CRAIG. As my colleague knows, I have introduced legislation aimed at preventing Federal education funds from being used to suppress student speech. I appreciated having the chairman's cooperation during the debate on S. 2, when the first half of my bill was accepted by the Senate as an amendment. That amendment expressed the sense of Congress in opposition to restrictions on student freedom of speech.

I had intended to offer the remaining portion of my bill—the enforcement section—as an amendment to the higher education reauthorization bill. However, it is my understanding that the committee has decided to hold a hearing on the subject of university codes of conduct or other similar restrictions on students. Is that true?

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator is correct. Given the alarming number of incidents of racial and sexual harassment that have occurred over the past few years at our Nation's colleges and universities, the committee has decided to hold a hearing to examine the extent of the problem and various approaches these institutions have taken to combat offensive conduct.

The committee is particularly concerned that institutions of higher education be able to maintain an atmosphere which advances knowledge, assists in the search for truth, and fosters an environment conducive to teaching, learning, and reasoned discourse.

Mr. CRAIG. And is it true that the committee expects to hold this hearing before the end of the school year—that is, in April or May of this year, and allow the minority to name a fair portion of the witnesses?

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CRAIG. I thank the chairman and commend him for pursuing this very troubling issue. Since information resulting from the hearing may suggest changes needed in my freedom of speech on campus bill, I think it would be premature for me to offer the enforcement section of the bill as an amendment at this time. I am withholding the amendment and look forward to working with the chairman and members of his committee toward this important and timely hearing.

DEFERMENTS FOR DENTAL RESIDENTS

Mr. THURMOND. I understand that S. 1150, the Higher Education Amendment of 1991 includes changes in deferments for medical residents.

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator is correct.

Mr. THURMOND. Under current law and regulations, for purposes of obtaining a deferment during a residency, a distinction is made between dental residents on the one hand, and medical residents on the other. Dental residents who are classified by their institutions as students, can obtain an in-school deferment for certain title IV student loans during the length of their residency. The reasons for treating them as students are that many dental residents pay tuition during their residencies and receive little or no stipend.

In a recent sampling of 13 States, it was found that 70 percent of the dental residents either: First, pay tuition and receive no stipend; or second, pay tuition and receive a small stipend. Tuition averaged $10,000 per year for the 1990–91 academic year and the net stipend available to first year residents after payment of tuition averaged $8,291. Due to these costs and because dental residency training is not required for licensure in most States, only about 60 percent of graduating students do residency training. Most of the residency programs are 2 years or less in length.

Is it the Senator's understanding that S. 1150 does not change current law or regulations with regard to dental residents' eligibility for in-school deferments?

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator is correct. No change concerning dental residents' eligibility for an in-school deferment under title IV student loan programs has been made.

Mr. THURMOND. I appreciate the Senator's clarification.

SHORT-TERM PROGRAMS

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to express my concerns regarding discontinuing Federal financial aid for short-term programs, such as truck driver training programs, beautician colleges, and so on. Throughout the process of reauthorizing the Higher Education Act, there has been a great deal of concern and interest placed on improving the Federal financial aid opportunities for lower and middle-income students and their families. I praise the chairman of the Education Subcommittee, Senator PELL, and the chair of the full Labor Committee, Senator KENNEDY, as well as the Senators from Kansas and Utah for their diligent work in this respect and for their work on the bill in total.

While I am appreciative of the lengths to which the committee has gone to extend financial aid to the lower and middle-income populations, I am concerned about excluding short-term programs. Mr. President, lower and middle-income students are exactly the populations served by short-term programs. Short-term programs serve at-risk students who need the help more than many of the students who attend longer programs. Short-term programs offer training and retraining for the unemployed and underemployed, thereby providing that person with an employable skill which translates into a paying job.

I realize that provisions to exclude short-term programs from Federal financial aid are meant to avoid the fraud and abuse that can occur in such programs. And that is an effort I endorse. However, I argue that we cannot and should not punish those who are providing needed services to needy populations just because of a few bad apples. In addition, most of the schools which are guilty of fraud and abuse of the financial aid system have already gone out of business and the few that remain will be put out of business by reforms already enacted.

Others argue that short-term programs generally have high default rates. While this may be true, Mr. President, I have found that the default rates of various technical colleges are equally high. This may suggest that the default rates are a result of the population these schools are serving rather than the schools. Also, I need to again point out that the existing reforms regarding excessive default rates, in addition to the more stringent measures in this bill will substantially address the issues of willful fraud and abuse. If a school has a default rate in excess of 25 percent, they are not eligible for Federal financial aid. Before we totally turn our backs on these types of programs, we ought to make sure that we have addressed the myriad of problems in the collection process itself and that States have enforced stringent licensing and regulatory requirements. If there is anything short of denying aid to students of these programs, I think that ought to be pursued.

Mr. President, I simply ask that this issue be more fully explored by the House of Representatives and the conference committee on this legislation. The reality is that we do need truck drivers and beauticians. We need clerical workers and travel agents, welders, and air-conditioning repairpersons. We need food service and hospitality personnel and airline technicians. Mr. President, I think we need to fund short-term programs in a manner that assures integrity and sound financial management, but also ensures access to these programs by low-income students. I look forward to working with my colleagues to strike that balance.

PARTNERSHIP FOR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT AND URBAN COMMUNITY SERVICE

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I rise briefly to thank my colleagues for the partnership for economic development and urban community services provisions included in this bill.

The grants awarded through this program will enable institutions to become stronger partners in community planning and strategy implementation.

Particularly for those universities in inner city urban areas, crime has become a serious threat. Often it is a mirror of more enigmatic problems of poverty, unemployment, and substance abuse. Increasingly, colleges and universities are seeking to become part of the solution to those problems, offering their resources to the community in an effort to protect their mutual interests. This grant program will help them in that effort.

Last October, Jim Sankovtiz, vice president for governmental and community affairs at Marquette University testified before the House Committee on Banking, Finance, and Urban Affairs. His statement, which follows my remarks, speaks eloquently of the challenges facing college campuses in metropolitan areas.

Rev. Albert J. DiUlio, president of Marquette, has gone beyond the simplistic response of increasing campus security. He has sought not to build a wall around the university, but to tear down the walls within the community. He has gone out to the Milwaukee business and political communities, committed the university to millions of dollars in community rehabilitation and redevelopment and has been joined by several corporations in his quest.

The community partnership provisions in the higher education reauthorization provide an opportunity for Federal support of Marquette's efforts in Milwaukee. I want to thank my colleague from Oregon, Senator HATFIELD, for his vision and leadership in this regard. I look forward to working with him and others to secure this authorization and to vigorously pursue funding for the grant program.

I ask unanimous consent that Jim Sankovitz's testimony, a summary of the Marquette plan, as well as the texts of the Milwaukee Journal and Sentinel editorials and articles be printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TESTIMONY OF JAMES L. SANKOVITZ, VICE PRESIDENT FOR GOVERNMENTAL AND COMMUNITY AFFAIRS, MARQUETTE UNIVERSITY, OCTOBER 28, 1991

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Subcommittee. My name is James L. Sankovitz, vice president for governmental and community affairs at Marquette University, in Milwaukee, WI. I appreciate very much your invitation to testify before you this morning on the topic of the future of this Nation's urban institutions of higher education. I am particularly pleased to participate with representatives of UAB, for which we have a great deal of respect and which we believe shares a mutual concern for the type of campus we jointly represent. Whether state supported or independently-sponsored, the collegiate campuses located in urban settings throughout this Nation face unusually complicated futures not because of their fundamental mission, but for reasons of location and metropolitan expectations.

Marquette's involvement in this hearing and in similar meetings and discussions the past several months is a direct result of our seeking Congressional attention for the future of campuses facing unusual challenges because of their physical environment and academic mission. A snapshot description of urban campuses would include, in most cases, fairly large to quite sizable enterprises carrying on a widely ranging variety of campus as well as community-related activities, providing services to a host of agencies and populations much more diverse than most collegiate campuses. At the same time, most of these institutions are surrounded by neighborhoods which not only relate to the business of metropolitan centers but also are physically much in decline. Marquette is located in a typical setting. It has some not well-defined boundaries that spill over into pockets of socially and economically needy people, the majority of whom need help because they are relatively poor, represent the very young or much older populations more so than do their suburban counterparts, and contain dense concentrations of minority citizens. It is a downtown campus.

It is in these typical settings that colleges and universities have come to be regarded as holding the potential to offer more social service and community interaction than do campuses located in more remote and stable environments. So, it comes as no surprise that campuses such as Alabama-Birmingham and Marquette often—and with increasing frequency—are called upon to focus more activity, resources and ambition on the surrounding reality. In precious few instances can this practice of higher education be described as an ivy-clad exercise. The fundamental mission of higher education of these campuses is every bit as much focused on teaching, scholarly investigation and institutional service as are other campuses not as intensely conscious of the surrounding community, but the urban campus routinely caters to the immediate and practical issues that dictate day-to-day life.

A quick way to illustrate this somewhat different mission is to cite a very positive factor. Most medical centers thrive in urban settings because a related good is adequate patient access. That is true for Alabama-Birmingham's medical activities as it is for Marquette's dental program, particularly as both operate extensive clinical programs.

However, while such outreach and natural relationships of campus to community have thrived in some education and health care delivery contexts, the same is not so abundantly true for other academic disciplines. Would the same be so for our sociologists, linguists, philosophers, physical scientists and the like—those teachers and students who, by the very nature of their pursuits, often educate or are educated in some isolation from what is happening just across the street from the campus boundary—many of the rigors of life might be addressed much more directly in the Academy's search for new knowledge and better applications.

We have known about the somewhat different conditions facing urban campuses for years and there has been substantial progress made in knitting campus potential to community needs. But the recent acceleration of decay and deterioration in our Nation's central cities prompts a very testy question. Where will the students of tomorrow elect to enroll?

Higher education has survived despite a spate of advice by well-meaning but often poorly-informed publications which annually proclaim what's the "best buy" or the "leading" or the "most stable" campus for next year's wave of new enrollees. Now, in place of the "which is best" advisements has come a different sort of counsel—what's the "safest" place?

The deterioration I mentioned as a common ingredient of the neighborhoods surrounding urban campuses often means, simply, crime infestation, drug culture, physical and financial collapse, and one set of people often preying on another set. Thus it is that urban campuses have had to create yet another service—police units, sometimes called public safety or security forces. This should not come as a surprise. After all, the collegiate campus once firmly rooted in teaching or research has, over time, come to also operate hotels, restaurants, banks, athletic facilities, consulting tanks, etc. Adding a police force isn't that much of a stretch once the pattern was established. And, students and their parents have come to expect security provisions just as much as well-equipped classrooms.

But, at what cost? Marquette employs about six dozen public safety personnel to look after the security of an 80 acre campus abutting downtown Milwaukee, at an annual operating cost of $1.5 million. That might strike some people as not a great deal of money to promise safety, especially in an annual operating budget of $135 million (which is small when compared to the scope of Alabama-Birmingham) but what would that amount buy in terms of traditional campus expenditures? About 25,000 new library books a year, or about 165 undergraduate tuitions at our present tuition rate of $9,000, or some 30 professional lines—hardly trifling for a tuition and gift-dependent campus. But, we have no alternative.

The passage last year of the Student-Right-to-Know and Campus Security Act now requires campuses to report crime. When you have a campus through which the City's downtown streets run and for which there are more nearby off-campus housing quarters than there are on campus, the crime statistics reporting systems are much more telling reports for the non-campus environment and neighborhoods than they are for the campus itself. But it is the campus that bears the brunt of defending the notoriety of incidents, especially when prospective enrollment is at stake.

Crime can happen anywhere. It was a tragic coincidence that a deranged serial murderer chose to exercise his lot close to the Marquette campus last summer, thus calling to unforgetting minds the five separate killings of Marquette students in off-campus incidents the previous six years. The Marquette campus is no less safe now than it was before that awful history, but the relationship of the University to the cruel consequences of life nearby will taint descriptions of Marquette for a long time.

These incidents have caused a reasonable longrange planning question. That is, can Marquette and the campuses like it continue to do business as usual, living side-by-side with some unattractive neighborhoods and still reach out into the community to share its educational mission with the community in general, or should it wall itself off from life?

Marquette, like a good number of other urban campuses nationwide, persists in the ambition that reaching out, sharing even more of its educational resources with the surrounding community, is the better course. We have our critics, though, who say our future is dictated by creating distance between campus and city.

There is already a goodly amount of campus/community involvement. Our students tutor youngsters in nearby schools. Our health science units daily obtain educational good from practice in clinics throughout the city. Internships provide valuable real life experience for students. Engineers create tot lots for neighborhoods and volunteer for Habitat for Humanity projects. For more intensive and lifelong experiences, students travel to Appalachia to lend healthy hands and in the intervening months collect and deliver food and clothing for daily assistance to needy neighbors.

These are not unusual examples. Most campuses operate at least some of these activities; perhaps not in as concentrated doses as might occur on the urban campus but they are there nonetheless.

The major point is, given the threatened and threatening circumstances of urban, central city neighborhoods, collegiate campuses will be asked to take on even more responsibilities in the future. And, at a time when the resources of even the most financially secure colleges and universities are stretched to the fullest, it will be much more difficult for most to do a great deal more.

What would we do if there were more resources? A few examples should suffice. We have a good legal clinic that serves the needs of citizens looking for help but can't afford regular legal advice. Put those students and faculty in neighborhood storefronts, rather than operate them on a campus that many individuals find confusing. Let the journalism students create neighborhood papers or have them turn their creativity toward local cable television opportunities to staff a neighborhood, dedicated channel. Attack the absentee landlord syndrome by creating new housing value and providing walk-to-work incentives that lead to new neighborhood investment. Put education faculty regularly and routinely in the neighborhood schools and create a regular flow of elementary, middle and high school students and teachers between the schools and the collegiate campuses. Build cogenerational housing so that one age group—old or young—doesn't suffer isolation, but builds understanding. Build better links between and among security forces and local police departments so that the much-bandied concept of "community-based policing" can have real experiment locales to perfect eradication of the "cops versus us" mentalities that sour many neighborhoods.

The list of possibilities is endless and each component is not necessarily a funding blockbuster.

These are the kinds of interactions which the federal government had in mind when the original Title XI language was added to the Higher Education Act more than a decade ago. But that became words only when the intent was not deemed sufficiently important to attract appropriations. The lack of funding for Title XI is nothing short of the adage—do as I say, not as I do.

Our message this morning is quite simple. Members of Congress are fully aware of the pressures mounting on central and inner cities and most Members want to do something about the situation before it becomes a crisis without solution. But, time is running and Members ought to consider that not only will urban neighborhoods fail completely if no substantial relief is provided, but the urban colleges and universities that are part and parcel of this evolution just may go the same way—at least those campuses which strive to be part of the solution and not place moats around them, to separate education from the realities of life.

The early drafts of the House reauthorization of the Higher Education Act have shifted the standalone Title XI ambitions into a new, comprehensive Title I, separating the campus/community ambitions into a set of objectives which appear to contain less ambitious expectations. It would be a shame if, when there finally is growing appreciation for the unusual characteristics of urban campuses, the Congress would send a message that less significant achievement is desired.

Perhaps the Higher Education Act alone is not the appropriate route to address the urban campus problems. Perhaps it will require a meshing of ambitions as between several federal agencies, not just Education. Perhaps a consolidation of effort, if not jurisdiction, as between Education, HUD, Banking and Urban Affairs and the various research agencies is the only reasonable way to get at this problem. If that's so, so be it. The federal government has not been lacking in solving problems when there is a concerted push to solve a problem. I am prejudiced, no question. But, in my mind the shrill cry of police sirens in our neighborhoods is no less a clarion cry than Sputnik's "beep beep" of the late fifties, and we all know how the nation rallied to that threat.

The mechanics should be no problem. The problem is this: Are the urban campuses worthy of concentrated attention and funding? Are they today's counterpart to the historic land grant initiative? Do they deserve the attention given similarly to the sea grant institution ambitions? Does the Congress realize that urban campuses hold a powerful promise for solutions to the inner city problems that beset metropolitan communities throughout the nation?

Critics of what Marquette has proposed are in ample supply. We have asked to become a demonstration project campus, to use $4 million of federal funding annually over five years to build a program of urban problem-solving using a collegiate campus as the central focus and the neighborhood and downtown as equal beneficiaries. We set the dollar goal high deliberately but in accordance with what we thought was needed to create an incentive which could be used to attract and leverage the partnerships of other entities, public and private.

More recently the criticism has turned toward the exclusivity of what we sought, some people thinking it would be unseemly for just one campus to have an opportunity to address what is a national problem. If that objection is an obstacle, consider doing the same at a variety of urban campus locations and make the experiment a truly national effort. If there are ways that campus and community can be knit beneficially in Milwaukee, why not try the same approaches in, say, Watts, Chicago, Birmingham, Boston, Morningside Heights or any other urban location that has at least one urban campus that is willing to join a network of collegiate ambitions to test the usefulness of amending their educational missions to address globally the local urban problems. But, make it a legitimate process. Gather together those colleges and universities with the ability and desire to mount special urban programs, judge what are the reputable methods of such concentrations of problem-solving and create the score card that Congress will demand as part of the price to undertake the effort. If something tried in Birmingham was a splendid success but flopped terribly in Milwaukee, why? If something tried in Boston attracted matching private support and didn't in Los Angeles, again, why? If the City of New Orleans benefited from the approach in which Providence failed, again, why?

Marquette is not only eager to make the urban issues as related to higher education a quest of its own, but it is just as eager to rally others—cities and campuses—to do the same. We do that knowing full well that there have been cities, campuses and associations of like communities and institutions that have labored long and hard to create just such a Congressional sensitivity, but with less than widespread success. Perhaps our major contribution is nothing more than a fresh voice. But we'd like one thing to be known—it's high time that the urban campus obtain justified respect for what it's about and for the magnitude of what remains to be done.

We appreciate very much your invitation to express these thoughts at this hearing and hope that you will accept our contention that the Congress should address urban education more forcefully in the future as a genuinely, national issue.

PORTRAIT: A CAMPUS BATTLES TO RID ITS NEIGHBORHOOD OF CRIME

(By Katherine S. Mangan)

The Rev. Albert J. DiUlio had been president of Marquette University for only a year when reports emerged that a serial killer living within a mile of the campus had confessed to murdering and dismembering 17 men.

As fear spread through Milwaukee, Father DiUlio was determined not to allow a siege mentality to take over the campus. The murders by Jeffrey L. Dahmer, like the off-campus killings of five Marquette students over the last six years, were to Father DiUlio tragic reminders of the need to reach out to the community, not to build more walls.

So instead of pouring more money into campus security, Father DiUlio forged ahead with his ambitious proposal, called the "Marquette Plan," to help rid the declining neighborhood of crime. "I do not think walling the campus is an appropriate response for a major university," Father DiUlio says. "It reinforces the concept of universities as ivory towers." Universities that reap the benefits of urban settings have a responsibility to help communities address their problems, he believes.

LEADING ROLE IN CRIME FIGHT

The Marquette Plan calls for the 127-year-old Jesuit university to play a leading role in combating some of the root causes of crime in Milwaukee. The university would work to stimulate economic growth, refurbish dilapidated housing, and offer a wide range of social services, including legal assistance, drug and alcohol counseling, and dropout-prevention programs. Zoning laws would be reassessed to encourage long-term residence by existing community members as well as by Marquette faculty and staff members.

Marquette officials have asked the federal government for $4 million a year for the next five years to make the plan a reality. Campus officials acknowledge that their budget request may encounter resistance, and they say they're ready to turn to private sources for funds if need be.

The Milwaukee Journal, in an editorial last spring, called the Marquette Plan a welcome change for a university that had been viewed as detached from the community. "Aloofness has been an unfortunate part of Marquette's image," the editorial stated. "Often a psychological moat seemed to circle the campus—an impression deepened three years ago by the callousness that the university appeared to display toward permanent residents of the downtown YMCA when MU took over the facility for student housing."

Urban universities will have a difficult time attracting students if they cannot offer reasonable assurances that their campuses are safe, says Father DiUlio. But such assurances, he says, aren't enough.

"I believe that rather than simply informing students about rising crime rates on and near their campuses, urban universities should utilize their significant academic, human, and financial resources, in partnership with their communities, to actually reduce those rates." Father DiUlio told members of Congress during a hearing in August. "The Marquette Plan will bring students, faculty, and staff together with members of our neighborhood community in a coordinated effort to address not only the issue of crime on and near our campus, but also the root causes of that crime."

While many urban institutions have taken steps to try to improve the neighborhoods around their campuses. Marquette's plan is one of the most for reaching. "It's a very ambitious and very impressive project," says Jim Harrison, president of the Association of Urban Universities. While other urban universities have launched community-development projects. "I don't know any others that are quite this ambitious," he adds.

SEAT ON POLICE PANEL

Father DiUlio's interest in reducing crime in Milwaukee promoted the city's mayor, John O. Norquest, to ask him to head a panel last summer to study relations between the city's police department and its citizens. The commission, which reported its findings last month, grew out of anger over the way the police had handled the Dahmer case. Before Mr. Dahmer was arrested, police responded to a complaint about a disturbance at his apartment but left the area after Mr. Dahmer told them that he and a young Laotian man were homosexual lovers. Mr. Dahmer has since admitted murdering the Laotian youth.

Many critics charged that the case was indicative of the police department's tendency to ignore or minimize crimes when the victims are members of minority groups.

Among other things, the panel urged police to treat all citizens with respect and dignity, regardless of their race or sexual preference. It also called on police to make more of an effort to get to know the neighborhoods they patrol. The commission reviewed thousands of pages of testimony and transcripts from public hearings and private meetings before issuing its findings.

Playing a key role on the panel reinforced Father DiUlio's philosophy that urban universities cannot seal themselves off. He says he hopes the Marquette Plan could serve as a national model for other urban institutions in that regard.

"The Marquette Plan says a lot about urban universities in America today," says Father DiUlio, "It's taking the best that both cities and universities have and putting them together to solve problems."

CAMPUS CIRCLE PROJECT

(1) What is the Campus Circle Project?

Campus Circle is a dynamic, comprehensive approach to meeting the challenges of our urban environment. In addition to the Marquette Neighborhood Partnership Plan, it seeks to provide:

Affordable Family Housing for neighborhood residents through rehabing existing housing and new construction

Walk-to-work and retirement housing for area employees

Off-campus student housing, both rehab and new

Acquisition, rehab and resale of properties which do not contribute to a positive neighborhood environment

Commercial development, both upgraded and new

(2) How will it work?

We will develop a Not-For-Profit corporation to use grants and low-interest, long-term loans for housing and other related activities. For example, the Not-For-Profit could act as a general partner in an affordable housing effort. Such an approach would allow the corporation to attract entities like Wisconsin Energy or Sinai-Samaritan to join Marquette.

We will also establish a For-Profit corporation to use seed capital and conventional financing for commercial development such as new businesses in our community.

(3) Will the Campus Circle Project use Marquette operating funds?

The monies to fund this project will not come from operational or annual budget funds. Designated reserve funds and other assets will provide the seed capital for the project.

(4) How much will the Campus Circle Project cost?

The Board of Trustees has authorized up to $9 million from Marquette's investment resources to fund this project. In addition, investments by other businesses in the area could be leveraged to total more than $100 million for housing and commercial development of the life of the Project.

(5) Is the Campus Circle Project part of the Sasaki Master Plan?

No, Sasaki deals with educational facilities, recreation and parking on and around the campus. This is a neighborhood initiative. There will, however, be a coordinated effort between Sasaki and Campus Circle.

(6) What's the difference between the Marquette Neighborhood Partnership Plan and Campus Circle?

The Marquette Neighborhood Partnership Plan is the $20 million federal initiative announced this part summer. It is part of the Campus Circle Project, but does not include the two additional elements of housing and commercial ventures which will be undertaken by the Not-For-Profit and For-Profit corporations.

(7) If MU does not receive the $20 million dollars from the federal government, will the University still go ahead with the Campus Circle Project?

We will proceed with the For-Profit and Not-For-Profit corporations to establish housing and commercial projects. However, The Marquette Plan is a significant component in our neighborhood's success.

(8) Is MU going to purchase more land and expand the campus?

The two corporations may acquire land to achieve their goals, but the land will not be used to expand the campus.

(9) What effect will this have on the continuing crime problems in the surrounding area?

The Campus Circle Project is a long-term effort to get at the root causes of crime. Short-term solutions are being worked on with the Milwaukee Police Department and the City. Other short-term efforts will be announced in the near future.

(10) What is the goal for completion and sequence of events?

This project will begin immediately and it will be an ongoing effort. Our first tasks are to continue the community discussions, initiate partnerships with area businesses, develop the two corporations and establish priority projects.

(11) Who is in charge of directing the project?

Marquette has engaged Patrick LeSage, a principal in the Mooney LeSage Group, Brookfield, to direct the Campus Circle Project. Pat has extensive experience in real estate and land development and in forming public/private partnerships for economic and community development.

(12) How will we know the status of the project?

Watch the Marquette Tribune and News & Views. We may also have special communiques to announce new developments.

(13) Has the Campus Circle Project been reviewed and approved by the Trustees of Marquette University?

The Board of Trustees reviewed the plan at their December 4th meeting and gave their approval to proceed with the Campus Circle Project.

(14) How has Marquette worked with the City of Milwaukee on the Campus Circle Project?

Input and support from the Mayor's office and City Departments has been invaluable during the development of the Campus Circle Project. A close working relationship has been established and will continue through implementation.

(15) What is the economic impact of Marquette University on the City of Milwaukee?

The annual impact of the University and its related activities on the local economy totals over $360 million. Marquette has 11,500 students and employs approximately 2,000.

STAY THE COURSE ON MARQUETTE SAFETY

A brawl gets out of hand, and two Marquette University students lie in hospital beds with knife wounds. This incident is tragic—but it is no reason for panic over safety on and near the MU campus. University officials have already developed a far-sighted game plan for improving campus security; they must stay the course.

The immediate case doesn't fit the pattern that has caused concern at MU in recent years; the spillage of neighborhood crime onto student life. The brawl was between college students and could have broken out near off-campus housing just about anywhere. Alcohol appears to have played a leading role on both sides. In short, blame student misbehavior, not neighborhood ills.

Still, the episode has heightened concern about student safety. In partial response, Marquette is seeking a change in state law to certify its security department as a police force, with the power to carry guns and to make arrests. In light of increased dangers, the request ought to be honored.

The enhanced might of safety officers would entail additional responsibility on MU's part, however. To help deal with the low-income, culturally diverse neighborhood that borders the campus, sensitivity training would be in order. Also, MU must ensure that its safety force is sufficiently racially integrated.

The city, too, has a role to play—a fact it apparently recognizes. In a gesture of concern, Mayor John Norquist strolled through the Marquette area the other day with Father Albert DiUlio, MU's president. MU wants the boundary of the Police Department's 1st District moved west, so that the campus won't be so split between two districts—a sensible request that Police Chief Philip Arreola wisely intends to honor.

Marquette has already mapped out a plan for improved safety, combining nuts-and-bolts security measures with visionary effort, to improve the neighborhood. The university mustn't be spooked into abandoning that promising route to true security.

MU, FIRMS TO JOIN FORCES IN IMPROVING NEIGHBORHOOD

(By Fran Bauer and Marilyn Marchione)

Marquette University officials were expected to announce Wednesday that they will join forces with several corporations to redevelop the campus neighborhood in an effort to make both the school and the area safer.

According to sources, a new redevelopment corporation will be formed by Marquette and its business partners, including Catholic Knights Insurance Co., SinaiSamaritan Medical Center, Wisconsin Bell and Wisconsin Electric Power Co.

The corporations and Marquette will invest an estimated $20 million to revitalize the area, according to the plan, sources said.

The new redevelopment corporation will buy and rehabilitate deteriorated housing surrounding the campus as well as some taverns that have become trouble spots for students. Once rehabilitated, the properties would be operated by a new property management firm.

The plan will be done in stages and will involve the Avenues West area, bounded by Interstate 43 and 94, N. 27th St. and W. Highland Ave.

The Marquette campus is bounded by N. 11th and N. 17th Sts. and W. Clybourn and W. Wells Sts., and is generally bisected by W. Wisconsin Ave.

As part of its long-range planning, Marquette has discussed the possibility of eventually closing W. Wisconsin Ave., through the campus and seeking ways to tie the campus more directly to downtown Milwaukee.

The plan is aimed at helping to unify the campus and address security concerns that have mushroomed as the area has grown more impoverished and crime-ridden. In the past six years, five Marquette students have been killed off campus.

"It's an exciting approach to solving a crime problem," said one businessman who was briefed on the plans.

"Rather than building walls around the campus," Marquette wants to reach out to make the entire area safer, said the businessman, who requested anonymity.

"All urban campuses in America have a crime problem, and Marquette is going to take dramatic steps" to address it in Milwaukee, the businessman said.

Patrick LeSage, a real estate and development expert, has been hired by the university to work on the project.

"They've done their homework," the businessman said.

TIE-IN WITH FACILITIES STUDY

The plans will dovetail with a facilities study by the university.

In October, a Massachusetts consultant hired by Marquette, Sasaki Associates Inc., told the university's Executive Senate that the campus needed a sense of unity and a center, rather than being comprised of a series of disjointed buildings throughout a number of city blocks in the sprawling campus.

The consultant's plan involved studying building security, green space, accessibility of facilities and ways of restoring a sense of being on a campus. The campus needs entry points that are more readily identifiable, the consultant said.

Much of the housing and commercial rehabilitation work will be done by the First Wisconsin Community Investment Corp., an arm of the First Wisconsin National Bank that was formed in 1986.

First Wisconsin is currently redeveloping the former St. Anthony's Family Hospital, at N. 27th and W. Wells Sts., into county medical health facilities and shops.

First Wisconsin's development arm has rehabilitated some housing in the neighborhood for the Good Samaritan campus of the medical center and also is to renovate apartments on W. Wells St., between N. 29th and N. 32nd Sts., as part of an extensive plan to improve the near West Side.

UNIVERSITY APPLIED FOR GRANT

Mayor John O. Norquist's staff would not comment on Marquette's plans.

City Engineer John Erickson said Wednesday that he was aware that Marquette was studying facilities plans but said he hadn't been shown the plans that the university was set to announce.

"I know in the past they've been interested in improving pedestrian access across Wisconsin Ave.," he said.

In July, Marquette applied for a $20 million, five-year federal grant to develop a project to reduce violent crime and improve the lives of residents near its campus. Congress has yet to act on the bill that would award the grant.

OPENING DOORS: MARQUETTE BRINGS HOPE TO WEST SIDE

Like longtime homeowners who, faced with a neighborhood on the skids, invest time and resources in turning things around, Marquette University has launched an ambitious plan to improve the quality of life on the West Side.

Whether intentionally or not, Marquette has taken its cue from successful neighborhood associations, not only in Milwaukee but around the country.

One of the first things these groups do is to re-introduce residents to one another and convince them of their mutual interests.

As part of Marquette's plan to reduce crime, improve housing and develop new businesses in the neighborhood around the campus, university officials have already recruited corporations that have complexes or offices in the area.

They include Wisconsin Bell, Catholic Knights Insurance Society, Wisconsin Energy Corp. and Aurora Health Care, which operates Sinai Samaritan Medical Center.

By also reaching out to residents, schools and smaller businessmen with the promise of a better environment in which to live and work, Marquette is wisely putting into place the human infrastructure that will help guarantee success for what is being called the Campus Circle project.

As University President Father Albert J. DiUlio said, "We do not live in isolation."

Recognizing that talk is cheap, Marquette is opening its own checkbook, pledging $9 million in reserve and development funds to the project. The school also is seeking contributions from corporations and foundations, in addition to its previously-announced quest for $20 million in federal money to fight crime and other neighborhood problems.

Among other things, the Campus Circle plan calls for developing new neighborhood businesses and improving existing ones; building new homes and repairing existing buildings to provide affordable family housing; and buying, repairing and selling properties that hurt the neighborhood, such as those ubiquitous drug houses.

Marquette, obviously, has an important stake in this project on a sad but very personal level. Five Marquette students have been killed in separate off-campus incidents in the past six years.

To its credit, however, Marquette realizes the best way to make its streets safe again is not to double-bolt doors, but to throw them open to new and imaginative ideas.

[From the Milwaukee Journal, Dec. 15, 1991]

FINE PARTNERSHIP TO RESCUE MU'S NEIGHBORHOOD

Few problems are as debilitating as crime; yet Marquette University is refusing to succumb. Instead, that institution has been brilliantly devising strategies for fighting back. The latest is the formation of a partnership with nearby institutions for the sake of revitalizing the neighborhood and making it safer.

The consortium's plans include turning deteriorated housing and crime nests into more livable space, encouraging neighborhood-oriented businesses to move in, and marketing housing to employes and retirees of the partner institutions.

The partners—the Wisconsin Energy Corp., Wisconsin Bell, Catholic Knights Insurance Co., and SinaiSamaritan Medical Center, as well as MU—wisely realize they can't wall themselves off from their poor neighborhood. The better course is to put the institutions' resources to work to improve the area.

It's a refreshing attitude for Marquette, which in the past was too aloof from its surroundings, seeming to look to its neighborhood only for the sake of campus expansion. This estrangement can be blamed in part for the present state of affairs, with neighborhood crime spilling onto student life. But it's not too late for corrective action.

By bringing their own present and retired workers back into the area, the new partners can help make it what a close-to-downtown neighborhood ought to be: a vibrant mix of all sorts of people, from low-income to well-to-do.

True, the institutions aren't chiefly responsible for the poverty that's now wreaking so much havoc. Outside forces, including lack of jobs, are mostly to blame. Still, Marquette is showing how major institutions can counter those forces to improve a neighborhood and help themselves at the same time.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I rise as we conclude this debate to commend my distinguished colleagues who have assembled this bill over the last 2 years, the chairmen and ranking members of the Senate Labor Committee and its Subcommittee on Education.

We have had our differences on several of the important issues raised by this legislation. But, drafting this bill, and bringing it to the floor, has been a bipartisan endeavor. We are all indebted to our colleagues for the hours and hours of hard work that has brought us to this concluding point in the debate.

I also rise to reflect briefly on the significance of what we are doing this legislation, and to place on the record concerns I have about several important issues in higher education in this country that must remain the focus of our attention.

As I have stated many times before, I entered this debate with some deep seated biases, as one who grew up in a higher education community, as the son of two teachers, as the parent of four sons now in—or recently graduated from—college, as a private college trustee, as a member of the committee that drafted this bill, and as a Senator from a State that cares more about education than any other public service.

That interest is reflected in the very thoughtful input on this legislation I've received from thousands of Minnesotans over the past 15 months.

In hearings, forums, letters, and meetings all over the State, I've heard from both the consumers and the providers of higher education in my State. And much of what I say here today about both the value and shortcomings of this legislation, Mr. President, come from the Minnesotans I represent.

This is a highly complex subject as our chairman and ranking members know so well. They've produced a 600-page bill that does everything from expanding library technology grants to improving the quality of teacher training.

Of course, the complex subject of student financial aid is at the very core of this legislation. And, I don't think any one of us would claim to be an expert in all the nuances of the cost of attendance or expected family contribution of congressional needs analysis or many of the details and fine-print crammed into the 600-page bill we have before us.

What I do know is that this legislation represents two important realities.

First, it's never before been more important to get a high quality college education in America. Our lifetime incomes as individuals are measurably higher if we do. And, our productivity and output as a nation are absolutely dependent on the quality of education we all receive.

And, second, Mr. President, it's never before been more evident that Americans especially middle-income Americans are deeply worried that their kids won't be able to afford the same level and quality of education that many of us received, just one generation ago.

There's been a lot of talk this week—in this Chamber and in this town—about messages being send and received all across America.

One of those messages, Mr. President, is a deep-seated fear that college is again in danger of becoming the sole province of the totally subsidized poor and those few wealthy Americans who need no subsidies at all.

Just 2 months ago, a new national survey found the rising cost of higher education to be the third greatest fear of American families behind only crime and drugs and ahead of health care.

We're doing a number of things in this legislation to help address that fear. We need to, and are, increasing the maximum size and income eligibility limits for Pell grants. We need to, and are, increasing the maximum loan limits for the Stafford Program, and for other federally guaranteed student loan programs authorized by this legislation. We need to, and are, strengthening specially targeted programs aimed at low-income, at risk, and minority students. I support all those improvements in this legislation, Mr. President, and I wish fiscal realities would allow us to do more.

No one in this chamber can deny the need to place a higher priority on financing access to higher education for those who have suffered most from its rising cost.

I also appreciate the efforts of the managers of this legislation to improve the Stafford and other guaranteed student loan programs that are at the core of our Nation's commitment to higher education. I especially appreciate the efforts to make the current loan programs simpler, easier to administer, and less likely to result in default.

Having pointed out all those positive features of this legislation, Mr. President, I must admit that I am still disappointed that we are facing a 21st-century set of problems with a 1960's and 1970's set of student loan programs.

That's why, during the course of this debate, I had hoped to join with the chairman of our committee, with my distinguished colleagues from Illinois and New Jersey, to introduce an amendment offering new and better IDEA for paying for college.

Although we were not able to offer that amendment in the context of this reauthorization, I am confident that we will make significant strides in advancing the concept of income contingent direct loans through a different legislative vehicle within the next few weeks.

The amendment we are working on is based on legislation I first introduced last summer called IDEA, authored in the House of Representatives by Representative TOM PETRI from Wisconsin.

My distinguished colleague from Illinois and I then expanded on the IDEA proposed in legislation we introduced last fall. Our amendment sets up a new student loan program that has two essential features;

College loans available to students directly from the government, eliminating millions of dollars in administrative expense and red tape, and payments base on post-college income made through the IRS, potentially eliminating millions of dollars in defaults and vastly simplifying how loans get collected.

I realize these changes represent a radical departure from our current system of student loans. That's why our amendment would gradually make the IDEA loan program available, initially limiting participation to students attending a specific number of institution.

And that's why our amendment would leave in place our other current loan programs, also leaving a place the current in-school interest subsidies that lower and moderate income students now qualify for.

But, the concerns and realities about both cost and access that I mentioned just a moment ago, Mr. President, require that we do more than patch up our present programs.

To be blunt, Mr. President, I do not believe that the 21st century challenge we face in higher education can be met only by our current 1960's era system of student grants and loans: A system that's unnecessary bureaucratic and complex; a system that largely neglects the needs of middle-income students and their families; a system that spends billions of dollars a year on overhead and redtape; a system that's vulnerable to administrative and financial problems best documented by last year's collapse of the Higher Education Assistance Foundation [HEAF]; a system that's limiting institutional, career and family-related choices for a growing number of students, and a system that's burdening millions of students with inflexible loan payments and a growing level of debt that produced $3.9 billion in student loan defaults last year.

We can, and we must, do better. And, I'm looking forward to working with my colleagues in the Finance Committee to make sure we authorize and new direct income-contingent loan program in this session of Congress.

On a second issue I care deeply about, Mr. President, I am pleased, that we were able to reach agreement on my amendment to offer greater incentives and rewards for academic excellence, especially on the part of lower income students, through a merit-based $1,000 bonus scholarship for high achieving Pell grant recipients.

The $100 million authorization for excellence scholarships sends a strong signal to all Americans that we value outstanding academic achievement and we value sound preparation for college. I appreciate the chairman's willingness to accept my amendment, and I appreciate his commitment to not only expanding access to higher education for low-income students, but for also encouraging and rewarding academic excellence.

I'm also pleased, Mr. President, that we were able to reach agreement on the amendment I joined in cosponsoring with my colleague from Minnesota, Senator WELLSTONE. This amendment will protect the special case of 2-year medical programs in this country. Although there are not very many of these schools, the ones in existence provide a crucial service to the communities which their graduates serve.

One such program resides in Duluth, MN, at the Duluth campus of the University of Minnesota [UMD]. This unique medical school is making an exceptional effort to address the problem of the growing shortages of primary care doctors by specifically recruiting students who have demonstrated or expressed a special interest in family practice. The faculty at the Duluth campus is also carefully chosen for their emphasis on primary care. The 2-year program at UMD is designed as a preparatory program for students who will go on and finish medical school at the University of Minnesota.

Although the University of Minnesota also places an emphasis on rural and primary practice, students who attend the program at Duluth are even more likely to go into rural family medicine than their counterparts at the University of Minnesota; 56 percent of UMD students go into primary care medicine while 24.6 percent of University of Minnesota students eventually work in family practices. This compares to a national average of 7–8 percent of medical school students entering primary care. As these figures demonstrate, the 2-year program at Duluth is an invaluable source of primary care and rural practitioners in the State.

In the past, the Public health Service Act has supported this program and others like it. This year's reauthorization however, does not include money for these programs. The amendment at hand will reauthorize $316,203 for the continuation of this worthwhile program and others like it.

As a Minnesota representative, I am proud of the many valuable contributions my State has made to the medical community in general and especially to the problem of primary care shortages. Although Minnesota has large rural regions, many States can benefit from our unique efforts to attract and retain young primary care and rural doctors.

Finally, Mr. President, let me take a few moments to briefly discuss four important issues that I believe need to remain at the forefront of this Nation's higher education agenda, especially as we prepare to enter the 21st century. The first of those issues is making sure that we recognize and support the growing role of telecommunications technology in delivering college-level courses. That recognition is reflected, in part in the definition of correspondence schools included in the committee substitute that excludes otherwise eligible institutions that offer associate, bachelors and graduate degrees from eligibility prohibitions otherwise placed on correspondence schools. And, I wholeheartedly associate myself with the colloquy on this subject entered into by our distinguished colleagues from Massachusetts and Oregon regarding a commitment to support current House language on courses delivered via telecommunications technology when this legislation goes to conference.

Leading educators in my own State of Minnesota have convinced me that the delivery of higher education is rapidly changing. I experienced that trend myself last year through a teleconference on student financial aid I conducted with students and financial aid directors from a dozen different schools.

We need to make sure the Federal financial aid programs keep up with and don't discourage those changes. And, we need to be particularly aware of the potential that new forms of telecommunications technology have for maintaining and improving access to quality education in rural areas and for an increasingly diverse student population that is more likely to have competing demands on their time at home and at work.

I believe a good principle to follow in meeting that challenge would be that our job is to make sure that financial aid goes to eligible students, eligible programs and eligible institutions. Outcomes ought to be used in determining the eligibility of programs and institutions. And, if those outcomes are being met, the method by which courses are offered shouldn't matter.

Second, we must continue to monitor the rising cost of educating and training physicians in this country, and make sure that the loss of interest deferment for medical students included in this bill does not discourage bright young Americans from choosing a career in primary care or rural medicine.

Again, I appreciate the changes made in the committee substitute that allow forebearance on both principal and interest payments to continue through the entire length of a medical residency. And, I believe that allowing HEAF loans to be included in loan consolidation will make debt management and cash flow much less onerous for individuals making the transition from relatively low paying residencies to higher paying practices once those residencies are completed.

But, obviously the loss of interest deferment during the first 2 years of a medical residency remains a serious concern to medical students. And, I believe we need to carefully monitor the impact of the loss of that interest subsidy on our ability to attract bright students to medicine—our ability to attract low income and minority students to medical schools, and especially our ability to attract students willing to serve in lower paying parts of the medical profession including primary care and rural practice.

A third important concern to me, Mr. President, is to make sure that Federal policy encourages growing private-sector support for scholarships, especially through community-based initiatives like the Dollars for Scholars Program based in my own State of Minnesota.

I am not one to urge a major new Federal bureaucracy designed to encourage programs of this nature which are now raising thousands of dollars in scholarships for students in more than 100 Minnesota communities. But, I believe it would be a good investment for the U.S. Department of Education to include encouragement and promotion of programs like Dollars for Scholars as part of a larger effort to expand private-sector support for scholarships that assist categories of students now underrepresented in higher education.

One final issue, Mr. President, involves the need to place much greater emphasis on quality, outcomes, and accountability in higher education. We can, and we must, be placing a higher priority as a nation on assuring broad and equal access to colleges and to other forms of higher education. But, we must also pay much more attention to what we get from a college education as customers and consumers of a product that must be of ever increasing quality and ever higher value.

My interest in quality, outcomes, and accountability in higher education, Mr. President, stems partly from my work on income-contingent loan repayment and the IDEA loan proposal that Senator SIMON and I introduced last fall. And, my interest in quality, outcomes and accountability in higher education also stems partly from the experience I've had over the last 15 years in working to fundamentally change another important public service that's in serious trouble.

Like health care, the cost of higher education in America is partly a function of demand and it's partly a function of who's responsible for paying the bills.

And, one of the most serious concerns I've heard expressed about my IDEA proposal is that, if we make it easier and less painful to pay for higher education, we'll see even more rapid increases in the cost of higher education in the future.

All of us need to be worrying more about things like cost and quality and appropriate placement and outcomes in higher education.

We do need to make higher education more accessible for every American student. And, we do need to be accommodating the changing nature of the student population and the growing importance of getting an education beyond high school and then throughout life. But, I also don't think we can indefinitely sustain a system that pays as little attention to costs and quality and outcomes as does higher education in America in the 1990's. Those of us paying the bills, both as individuals and collectively as a society, need to be asking hard questions. How can or should institutions that are eligible for Federal student aid programs be held accountable?

And, what criteria should be used? Graduation rates? Job placement rates? Job satisfaction levels? Average incomes of graduates 5 or 10 years after they leave school? And, on the other end of a college education, what should be done to better prepare students for college before they enter? Where should responsibility for that job lie? Should there be tougher entrance requirements for college, especially if society as a whole will be paying a larger part of the bill? None of these questions are easy to answer. But, they do have to be asked. All of us—as parents, students, employers—need to be putting more of our individual and collective resources into higher education in the future.

But, we also must insist even with a better IDEA for paying for college that we're getting good value for every dollar that we put in. The Federal Government has a role to play in achieving that goal. We made a start in that direction through the sections of S. 1150 that require the Secretary of Education to propose new and tougher performance standards for higher education institutions as a condition of eligibility for Federal student aid.

I also believe it would be wise to require that information on how colleges compare in meeting those standards and improving their performance be made widely available to prospective students, parents, and employers. I intend to monitor this new assignment we have given the Secretary closely, Mr. President. And, look forward to being actively involved in reviewing and implementing his recommendations once they come back to the Congress for our approval.

In addition, Mr. President, I believe we can look to the States for good ideas on how to add more accountability to the customers of higher education be they students, parent, or employers. One outstanding example of State leadership in this field is represented in the work of a task force in Minnesota appointed by Gov. Arne Carlson and chaired by Connie Levi, a distinguished former majority leader in the Minnesota Legislature and now president of the Minneapolis Area Chamber of Commerce. The Levi Commission made serving and responding to customers one of its highest recommended goals for Minnesota's system of higher education. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a summary of the Levi Commission's recommendations be printed in their entirety at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. President, let me conclude by again recognizing the outstanding contributions made by the managers of this important piece of legislation over the past 2 years. We have made an impressive start in advancing the important contributions of higher education in this country. We also have much more yet to do.

Thank you, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AT THE CROSSROADS: HIGHER EDUCATION IN MINNESOTA

(A Report of the Commission on Post-Secondary Education, January 1992)

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Six months ago, Governor Arne H. Carlson called together the Commission on Post-Secondary Education, chaired by Connie Levi. He charged the 20 commission members to review current resources, determine future needs and plan an integrated, efficient and effective system of post-secondary education. He further suggested that we look at issues of quality, accessibility and affordability.

To guide our thinking, we developed the following vision:

To be a world leader in high quality post-secondary education programs for the intellectual and economic advancement of the customer and all the citizens of Minnesota.

The Commission held eight meetings and members visited more than 70 campuses, where we talked to students, educators, policy makers and citizens.

Our Findings

Minnesota has a good post-secondary education system, one that has served us well in the past. But it needs significant changes if it is to continue to help us maintain our competitive advantage. This good system must become better.

Minnesota's economic survival depends on a well-educated work force, as does its quality of life.

In the future, higher education will be expected to better meet the needs of its customers with the same or fewer resources. To meet this challenge, the higher education system will need to contain costs and increase productivity.

Basic assumptions about the way higher education is structured, administered and delivered need to be re-examined. To live within its budget, higher education must focus its efforts and resources on its primary mission.

Our Recommendations

We have organized our recommendations into five areas: 1) Serving the Needs of the Customer, 2) Providing And Promoting Quality, 3) Redefining Access, 4) Leveraging Change through Funding and Other Policies and 5) Clarifying Missions and Creating Structures to Enhance Quality, Access and Customer Needs.

SERVING THE NEEDS OF THE CUSTOMER

Post-secondary education must focus on the needs of its customers, including students, employers and society as a whole. This is a revolutionary concept, because it implies that those who best know what is needed are not the providers, but the users of the products and services. Traditionally, administrators, faculty and others within the system have determined the needs. Looking at every function and process within higher education as being driven by the needs of its customers will profoundly change the way higher education defines and goes about its business.

We recommend

Each system and each campus should define its major internal and external customers, actively seek their input and design educational services and processes that meet their needs. Systems should report on these efforts to the 1993 Legislature.

The Governor should include, in his 1994–1995 biennial budget, funds to support a Minnesota Quality in Education Award similar to the national Malcolm Baldrige Award.

PROMOTING AND PROVIDING QUALITY

Quality should be determined by the customer and be stated in customer outcomes. It should not be defined by inputs, nor equated with additional dollars. Quality is not exclusivity—an open door institution can provide a quality education. Quality should be viewed not as a destination, but as a journey.

Definable outcomes should be used to measure progress. These outcomes should be based on world-class standards or benchmarks, focusing primarily on student knowledge and skills. Higher graduation rates, improved retention of students of color and higher rates of job placement are examples of possible state goals. Customer views and expectations can help to determine these goals.

We recommend

Each system, campus and program should develop quality indicators that are measurable, customer-defined and stated as outcomes. Each public system should develop the indicators by Fall 1993 and ways to assess their attainment by Fall 1994.

Development and implementation of these plans should be linked to future resource allocations. The Higher Education Coordinating Board (HECB) should review and comment on the indicators and plan for assessment and report to the Legislature before any incentive or performance funds are allocated.

Policy makers should articulate state goals for post-secondary education and direct the systems to find ways to measure and report progress toward them.

A sample of alumni and employers should be surveyed to assess the degree to which they are satisfied with the quality of their education. The survey should be designed by HECB, in cooperation with the systems. Survey results should be reported to the Governor, Legislature and the citizens of Minnesota biennially. This information also should be available to prospective students.

The HECB's program review process should require campuses to identify their customers and develop outcomes and indicators of attainment.

REDEFINING ACCESS

There are several kinds of access beyond geographic access. We also are concerned with psychological access; access to programs that meet the special needs of students, and logistical access to programs that meet the needs of the consumers and enable them to complete those programs as quickly as they are able. Financial access is also of concern. Cost-containment strategies are necessary if the dream of higher education is to remain within the economic reach of all Minnesotans.

We recommend

Financial access should be maintained with cost containment strategies, tuition levels and financial aid that will keep post-secondary education affordable for students and their parents.

Cultural access should be improved with policies and practices that help under-served populations feel at home and be successful.

Student choice should be maintained and expanded. Important options such as the private college system and reciprocity agreements with other states should be maintained. Additional choice through interstate telecommunications should be explored.

A telecommunications master plan that takes a regional approach should be developed. Planning should be coordinated by the HECB to expand and redefine geographic access through telecommunications, making efficient use of resources and coordinated planning.

Until a facilities utilization survey is completed, no new campuses or buildings should be constructed. As access is redefined, the need for additional bricks and mortar will diminish.

Campuses should remove barriers to timely completion of programs. An annual report on progress in this area should be made to students and policy makers.

LEVERAGING CHANGE THROUGH FUNDING AND OTHER POLICIES

The way resources are allocated sends a powerful message about what is valued and what will be awarded. If the goal is high-quality, accessible post-secondary education that meets the needs of the customer as efficiently as possible, then a funding formula should be devised to encourage those goals and outcomes. Other state and system policies also should encourage and reward quality and performance.

We recommend

The Governor should recommend and Legislature should allocate funds to conduct a policy audit to see if state policies are working.

The Task Force on Future Funding should develop a formula that is not based solely on enrollment. The formula should include performance and incentive funds that will reward quality outcomes and encourages innovation.

All systems should develop admission policies that encourages and reward preparation and achievement. We endorse the preparation standards developed by the University of Minnesota and the State University System as a first step. The two-year systems also should develop and publicize a set of preparation recommendations. Students meeting the preparation standards or recommendations should be granted a tuition reduction as an incentive for planning and working hard in high school.

Remedial or development education should be offered only at the two-year institutions. No college credit should be given for any remedial or development course. The cost of remedial education for recent high school graduates should not be paid with post-secondary funds. The K–12 system should provide the remediation or be charged for those costs.

Financial aid should have a component for performance as well as need, while recognizing the special needs of various groups of students. Some scholarships should be based upon academic performance or demonstrated improvement in performance.

High school graduation standards now being developed by the State Board of Education should be more rigorous than the current standards. The 80 percent of all high school graduates who will enroll in post-secondary education courses should graduate with the knowledge and skills needed to successfully complete college-level work.

Cooperative partnerships between K-12 and post-secondary education should be developed. HECB and the Department of Education should develop a plan and process to improve communication between all levels of education.

The HECB's Parent and 8th Grade Information Campaigns should continue so secondary students, their parents and the high schools understand both the academic and financial expectations and ways to achieve them.

CLARIFYING THE MISSIONS AND CREATING A STRUCTURE TO ENHANCE QUALITY, ACCESS AND MEETING THE CUSTOMER'S NEEDS

Mission: We cannot overstate the need for clear and clearly differentiated mission statements. Individual campuses should have mission statements that recognize the unique needs of the area served and the strengths of the campus within the overall mission of its system.

Campuses must know who their customers are and what needs they must meet. No campus can or should be expected to meet all the educational needs of the citizens of Minnesota.

We recommend

The directive of the 1991 Legislature requiring systems to eliminate programs not within their mission should be retained and enforced.

Campus mission statements should be developed that allow and encourage quality-driven niches of excellence within the overall mission of the system.

Structure: Like funding, structure is a means to the goals of quality ad access. It is not an end in itself. We think a structure should encourage innovation, meet customer needs and allow for decision-making at the lowest level possible while not losing sight of the state's needs.

We suggest dividing the state into higher education regions, similar to the economic development regions. Each region would have a combination of institutions from technical to baccalaureate, and students would be better served by a better-coordinated array of curricular offerings and services. Institutions could become more efficient by sharing staff and support services. Most important, unique quality-driven niches or centers of excellence could be created in each region, based upon the strengths of the campuses with the region, regional needs or needs identified by the state.

Governance for all public institutions except the University of Minnesota could shift to a central state authority. That body would have responsibility for making overall policy, selecting senior administrative staff, making resources allocations, collecting data and evaluating the quality outcomes.

The governing body must be committed to combining centralized governance with decentralized management. It must insist on setting high standards, but resist trying to standardize what institutions do. In an era of scarce resources, the governing board must assure that there are rewards for higher productivity.

We recommend

The HECB, in consultation with the Higher Education Advisory Council, should develop a plan to create post-secondary education districts throughout the state. Each region would have a Board of Advisors appointed to represent the needs and interests of the customers. A companion Board of Providers, composed of the heads of all campuses within the district, would be created to implement the regional delivery of services.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I rise to express my support for S. 1150—the Higher Education Reauthorization Act. Enactment of this legislation makes obtaining a postsecondary education even more accessible to every American.

I was very pleased to see the Pell grant entitlement provisions and the direct lending proposal dropped with a bipartisan consensus from the bill. I had serious concerns about the provisions which would have turned the Pell Grant Program into an entitlement over the next 5 years. While I strongly support the current Pell Grant Program, we simply cannot afford to double the cost of this program at a time when our national economy is struggling.

We must seriously address the issue of entitlement programs in this country. We have seen mandatory entitlement programs grow from 23 percent under President Kennedy's budget to an all-time high of 64 percent. That's 64 percent of the Federal budget over which we have relinquished control. For 1993 alone, entitlements will cost us $766 billion—$980.6 billion including interest. Entitlement spending limits our options for addressing important national needs by decreasing the pool of discretionary spending. It is the responsibility of the Congress to halt that trend.

I also was concerned about the proposed demonstration project for direct Government lending to institutions of higher education. The initiative, as proposed, would have put the Government in direct competition with the private sector in order to serve a limited financial objective. The Internal Revenue Service would be put in control of both the distribution and collection of student grants, thereby destabilizing secondary banking markets. Why put an agency in control of dispersing funds when it cannot address its own inability to collect defaulted student loans?

I was pleased that the managers of the bill responsibly decided to have a full hearing in the Finance Committee in a few weeks, on the proposal. I believe this proposal will then receive the full attention and scrutiny it deserves.

I would like to thank my friends Senator KASSEBAUM and Senator KENNEDY for their cooperation and assistance in the adoption of my small States teaching initiative amendment. Both floor managers did an excellent job and I deeply respect and admire their efforts to advance the goals of education in the United States. The amendment authorized $5 million in direct funds to land-grant institutions in the 10 least populated States in order to develop model programs for educational excellence, teaching training, and educational reform. I am optimistic that the funding will provide needed assistance for the development of innovative teaching techniques and materials in small States which tend to have a very hard time recruiting top quality teachers.

Once again, I look forward to enactment of this legislation and I am encouraged that many Americans—both young and old—will benefit from the education programs included in the bill.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 1150, the Higher Education Reauthorization Act. I am pleased to be cosponsor of this legislation. This legislation provides financial help for both disadvantaged and middle class families so that they may send their children to college. It also seeks to simplify the existing, cumbersome application process and to crack down on student loan defaults that drain our student financial aid resources.

This legislation provides greater assistance to lower income families by increasing the size of Pell grants from $3,600 in 1993 to $4,800 in 1998. By providing these increases in Pell grants, more access will be provided to these students to college, many of whom will be the first in their families to attend college.

This bill also makes it easier for middle class families to send their children to college by increasing the availability of grants and loans to them. In recent years, it has been difficult for middle-class families to obtain assistance in sending their children to college. With staggering increases in tuitution costs, many middle-class students have been squeezed out of an affordable higher education. This legislation makes more middle-class families eligible for Pell grants, extends the supplemental loan program and eliminates home equity from the student assistance eligibility formula for those families who earn less than $50,000 per year. These changes will make more and more New Jersey families eligible for Federal financial assistance.

The legislation also simplifies the student assistance application process. It mandates a simplified application form for middle-class families and establishes one system to determine need for all Federal assistance programs. This will spare students and families the frustration of filling out multiple forms and need analyses that often make the student assistance application process confusing and burdensome.

Furthermore, this higher education legislation contains several provisions that are designed to crack down on student loan defaults. These provisions will ensure that defaults are kept to a minimum and the money saved is put into student assistance so that more and more children can attend college.

Finally, this bill contains an amendment that I offered that would establish a Commission to study increasing tuition costs and make recommendations on how these costs can be reduced. Recently, tuition has increased faster than the Consumer Price Index [CPI] and in some years even faster than health care. My amendment also establishes a parent/student right-to-know law that will require universities and colleges to disclose to prospective students how they spend their tuition dollar. It also sets up a resource sharing grant program to provide funds to colleges and universities to pool existing resources and avoid duplication in order to hold down the long-term cost of tuition.

Mr. President, this legislation will make Federal assistance available to many more New Jersey students and make college more affordable for the average American family. I urge my colleagues to support the legislation.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I strongly support the bill we have just overwhelmingly approved.

Student financial aid, the keystone of the Higher Education Act, is among the best investments America makes in its people. Ensuring access to higher education for all segments of society helps equalize opportunities for all people to pursue and achieve the American dream.

It is directly in the national interest that our people be trained to meet the increasing demands of the global workplace. To retain our competitive edge, we need to have a highly educated American worker.

For these reasons, I am pleased that our financial aid programs are restructured by this legislation to expand access to assistance for a greater proportion of students who simply must have that help to attend college.

The bill also includes a provision which addresses the decisions students make on the other end of college, when they are struggling to determine how to pay off the debt they have accrued while getting their degrees.

Title XII of this bill includes an important demonstration project on loan forgiveness.

Section 1221 of this legislation will provide for cancellation of Stafford loans for individuals performing a variety of traditional service jobs.

For people considering—

Teaching in geographical and subject areas where teachers are lacking;

Performing community service for poverty-level wages; or

Working as nurses in the types of medical facilities which are experiencing shortages.

I expect this program offers a tremendous incentive to enter those fields.

The average student who takes a loan for college owes $7,200 by the time of graduation. This is only an average, and it is not atypical for a student to finish even a public education owing as much as two to three times that amount.

S. 1150 makes great strides toward returning the grant/loan balance to a more reasonable ratio. Nevertheless, debt burden will continue to be a major factor in the employment decisions made by our college graduates.

This demonstration project will allow us to study whether loan forgiveness indeed eases the pressure on indebted graduates to take high-paying jobs in order to pay off their loans.

Mr. President, there is another and equally important goal which we can further by providing loan forgiveness.

During fiscal year 1991, 5.3 million student loan accounts were in default for nonpayment. These accounts totalled $12.2 billion in Federal liability.

I am a firm believer in human integrity. I believe that students who are fortunate enough to receive a guaranteed student loan from the Federal Government are thankful for that opportunity and want to repay their debt. As we all know, however, many people are simply unable to meet their current financial obligations, much less make payments on acquired debts.

What we are providing here, Mr. President, is the chance for those people who are at the end of their financial rope to meet their obligations in another, perhaps more meaningful way.

I am speaking not of people whose financial situation precludes certain career choices, but of those who can choose to work off their debt by serving their country and their community in professions we have identified as critically needy.

The end effect may well be that people who had never thought about such careers may choose them after gaining this exposure. Regardless, I submit that everyone wins.

The students are released from their financial obligations with dignity and pride.

Important services are provided to those who desperately need them.

And the cost to the Federal Government is largely offset by the fact that many of these obligations would be written off anyway.

Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate accepted my amendment to this demonstration project which requires the Secretary of Education to identify the reasons for which people who participate in this program choose to do so. I am interested to learn their motivations, and I am certain that we can work with the information we gather to target our efforts more effectively.

I commend the authors of S. 1150 for developing an excellent bill. I was pleased to vote for its passage today, and I look forward to enactment of this important legislation.

INDIANS INTO TEACHING—AMENDMENT NO. 1671

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I rise today to offer an amendment that will help American Indians enter the teaching profession.

It is frequently difficult for educational institutions on Indian reservations to retain teachers. Reservations tend to be geographically isolated. And teachers frequently lack long-term ties to the local community. Consequently, more must be done to provide reservation schools and the kids who attend them with a stable teaching and learning environment.

My amendment accomplishes this goal in three ways. First, it provides institutional support to tribal community colleges and other tribally controlled educational institutions. The Conrad amendment authorizes the Secretary of Education, through the Office of Indian Education, to award grants for the purpose of providing upper division course work, transfer programs, articulation agreements with other accredited institutions, telecommunications programs or other mechanisms which directly support the training of American Indian teachers.

Second, my amendment provides student support grants to tribal colleges so that they may provide financial and programmatic assistance to those who wish to participate in their teaching programs.

Finally, my amendment authorizes scholarships for Indian students who wish to attend teaching programs at educational institutions off the reservation.

Students who receive financial assistance under the amendment are required to serve as teachers in an Indian community for 1 year for each year they receive financial assistance under the program.

This amendment meets a real need in Indian country. It provides important institutional support that will enable tribal colleges to expand their programs. And it will not only encourage Indian students to enter the teaching profession, but it will provide them with the financial means to do so and add to educational stability in Indian communities.

Mr. President, I am pleased to note that Senator McCAIN, the vice chairman of the Select Committee on Indian Affairs and Senator DASCHLE are cosponsors of my amendment.

I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I rise to thank the distinguished chairman of the Education Subcommittee, Mr. PELL, and the ranking member of the subcommittee, Mrs. KASSEBAUM for accepting three amendments which I proposed to the pending bill.

EXCLUSION OF RESTRICTED NATIVE AMERICAN-OWNED HOMES

The first amendment excludes the value of native American owned-homes which are located on Indian trust or other federally restricted lands as an asset for purposes of determining a native American student's eligibility for Federal student aid programs. At the present time, nothing in the law allows the exclusion of the value of homes owned by native Americans which they cannot sell due to Federal restrictions against alienation of the home itself or the land upon which the home is situated.

This creates a problem for native American students seeking Federal student aid assistance. They must count homes from which they legally cannot realize an economic value as an asset and this makes them ineligible for Federal student aid. This has created an impediment to higher education opportunities for native American because they do not generally have the ability to pay for college costs out of their own pockets. My proposed amendment will remove this barrier and improve native American student access to higher education.

RECORDING OF HEARING PROCEEDINGS

The second amendment restores an institution's right to a hearing on the record, if the institution is willing to bear the costs of recording the hearing proceedings. S. 1150 eliminates the current provision in the law which requires on the record hearings for suspension, termination, or limitation proceedings. My amendment adds language which states that nothing in the act is to be construed to prohibit an institution from recording the hearing proceedings at its own costs by using any reasonable means available.

CLARIFICATION OF CASH RESERVES AND TUITION RECOVERY FUND REQUIREMENTS

The third amendment clarifies the bill's provisions which deal with the maintenance of cash reserves and tuition recovery fund programs. My language will make it clear that the Secretary shall exempt an institution from the cash reserve requirements if he determines that the institution is contributing to the tuition recovery fund in the State where it is located and authorized to operate. This clarification will ensure that institutions which are participating in State-administered tuition recovery fund programs are not also required to maintain individual cash reserves for the same purpose by the Secretary.

Mr. President, these amendments are critical to ensuring access by all segments of our communities to the Federal student aid programs. I appreciate the Education Subcommittee and the full committee's willingness to accept these important modifications to the bill. I thank the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Kansas for their support and help.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of S. 1150. This bill will surely be one of the most important pieces of legislation the Senate passes this year. By expanding and improving Federal programs that support America's postsecondary students and institutions, we will well serve the future vitality of our Nation.

The Reauthorization of the Higher Education Act offers the Senate a chance provide increased assistance to the neediest students at our colleges and universities, and to ensure that middle-income families have greater access to Federal financial aid programs as well. This bill admirably meets both of these objectives, and establishes a variety of new initiatives to improve the quality of education at America's public and private schools.

As one of the fastest growing States in the Nation, Federal financial aid programs are especially important to Arizona. My State currently has approximately 250,000 students in our colleges and universities, and this number is expected to increase by 33 percent by the end of this decade. In order to ensure that all the deserving students in Arizona and throughout the United States have access to the financial aid they need, I feel that preserving the resources and integrity of financial aid programs must remain a priority for this body.

One of the landmarks of S. 1150 is the significant boost it contains for Pell grants. These grants are the very foundation upon which needy students can pursue their goals in higher education. The maximum Pell grant that a student can receive is increased from $3,100 to $3,600, and increases it to $4,800 by 1998. The family income for Pell grant eligibility is raised to $40,000 under the bill.

The amount a student can borrow under the guaranteed Stafford loan program is increased by this legislation to $3,000 for first-year students; $3,500 for second-year students; and $5,500 for third- and fourth-year students. Graduate students will be able to borrow up to $9,000 per year under S. 1150.

In addition to expanding eligibility for Pell grants and increased loans, middle-income students could benefit from several other provisions of this bill. The SLS Loan Program will be opened to dependent students with a creditworthy cosigner. Families with incomes under $50,000 will no longer have the equity of their home or farm considered in their needs analysis for financial aid. Families in this income bracket who do not file an IRS Form 1040 will have all their assets excluded.

I am very pleased that S. 1150 directs the Secretary of Education to create a simplified financial aid application form and reapplication process. The often confusing complexity of the current application system is one of the most frequent complaints I heard from the many Arizona students who contacted me about this reauthorization.

This bill will directly help students in Arizona by reauthorizing the State Student Incentive Grants [SSIG] Program. The SSIG Program, which combines Federal and State funds to assist needy students, is of tremendous benefit to many lower income Arizona students. The same is true for the Perkins Loan, College Work Study, and SEOG programs, which have all been reauthorized.

The crucial mission of TRIO programs—to recruit and retain disadvantaged students into college—are fully recognized in this bill. TRIO programs are especially important to Hispanic and Native American students in my State, who continue to be underrepresented in our community colleges and universities. As passed by the Senate, S. 1150 expands and increases funding for TRIO programs such as Upward Bound, Talent Search, and Educational Opportunity Centers.

TRIO programs, in partnership with local schools and community organizations, can help increase the amount of minority young men and women who pursue a college education—and support their successful advancement toward a degree. Our Nation will be far stronger if Government, colleges, and local schools can work together to ensure that increasing numbers of disadvantaged children are focused on a steady path toward a college degree.

One of the most innovative new programs established in this legislation are State and National Teacher Academies. State academies for teachers would be designed to improve the knowledge and teaching skills of teachers, and National Teacher Academies will be established in core subject areas such as English, math, and science. Several other effective teacher support programs have been reauthorized, as well.

S. 1150 also addresses the serious problem of student loan defaults. As every Member of this body is aware, student defaults in the guaranteed loan programs totaled over $3.6 billion in 1991 alone. This is an alarming figure, and one that justifiably raises the ire of taxpayers and policymakers alike. At a time of skyrocketing Federal budget deficits, increasing financial pressures on low- and middle-income families, and urgent social needs—this massive hemorrhage of taxpayer dollars must end.

This bill will lower the threshold at which schools with excessive default rates can be dropped from student aid programs to 25 percent. S. 1150 adds to this new default ceiling with provisions to reduce defaults and ensure proper accountability among the schools and financial entities involved in student loan programs.

Mr. President, I think the Senate and all Americans can be heartened by the passage of this bill. Our colleges and universities are clearly the finest in the world, and S. 1150 will provide vital assistance to deserving students and quality educational institutions. In passing this legislation, the Congress and the American people must remain dedicated not only to emphasizing educational excellence, but also to seeking new ways to help students and strengthen our colleges, universities, and vocational schools.

If we succeed, we will reap the benefits of an enlightened citizenry and a vibrant, highly skilled work force for decades to come. On behalf of the students and families in Arizona who are dedicated to better themselves through education and training, I look forward to helping in this effort.

I will give my full support to the passage of this bill to reauthorize the Higher Education Act. I yield the floor.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise today to express my strong support for S. 1150, the Higher Education Amendments of 1991. Mr. President, I commend the work of the managers of this legislation, Senators PELL and KASSEBAUM, who have moved this bill along in such an expeditious and bipartisan fashion.

With last month's passage of the Neighborhood Schools Improvement Act, S. 2, and our consideration of the Higher Education amendments, the Senate has taken great strides forward in addressing the educational issues confronting today's students and their families. This measure builds on the foundation of support for elementary and secondary education, contained in S. 2, to improve higher education.

The hallmark of S. 1150 is access. Access to quality higher education for all Americans, including the middle class who have been crippled during the last decade with rising costs and stagnating incomes.

Increased Access to higher education will especially help these families who have been increasingly squeezed out of Federal student aid programs. Since 1981, families have watched tuition costs climb by as much as 100 percent, while the Federal share of available financial aid has dropped from 83 to 75 percent. Moreover, since the mid-1970's, the percent of Federal aid to students in the form of grants has dropped drastically from 76 percent to 29 percent as loans have replaced grants as the major source of student aid. The cornerstone of the Higher Education Act in 1965 was increased access to postsecondary education opportunities to every student—and with this legislation we restore this Federal commitment to all students and families across our Nation.

Access is enhanced with the expansion of the Pell grant, Stafford loan and SLS loan programs to benefit low- and middle-income students alike. The maximum Pell award will be increased by this legislation redressing the grant/loan imbalance which has developed over the last decade. Additionally, the maximum income of families eligible to receive Federal aid will be increased to include more middle-income families in these programs. Further, this measure includes a proposal, similar to one I offered in my Better Access to Student Aid Act, which eliminates the consideration of home and farm equity from the calculation of student need. Expected student contribution is also reduced from 70 percent to a more reasonable level.

Access is also increased through the simplification of the student aid application process. The current methodology requires the filing of two separate, complicated forms—one for Pell grants and another for Stafford loans—this intimidating process has served to discourage many eligible families from applying for much needed assistance. S. 1150 provides for one simpler form and truly needy families will be eligible to fill out a further simplified needs test.

This bill also addresses one of the most serious problems which has plagued Federal student assistance—guaranteed student loan defaults. The very existence of the loan programs has been threatened by the problem of defaults, not only have costs skyrocketed, but public confidence has been shaken. With Federal resources so scarce, we cannot allow the loss of even one Federal dollar to fraud and abuse. In this regard, this measure contains measures to strengthen program and institutional integrity with higher standards for participating institutions and increased penalties for fraud or abuse.

This bill also enhances the special role higher education has in meeting a related educational need—the training of teachers. This bill provides real incentives for the recruitment and retention of quality teachers in classrooms around our Nation. I am especially pleased that a provision is included in this section, which I sponsored, to authorize matching Federal funding for the National Board for Professional Teaching Standards to complete its critical research and development on methods of teacher assessment. Additionally, the bill addresses the shortage of teachers in the critical fields of math, science, and foreign language; it also establishes a program to recruit minority students into the teaching field to address the acute shortage of minority teachers in many communities across the Nation.

Finally, the bill addresses an area of critical importance to our Nation's competitiveness—the study of foreign languages and culture. Mr. President, last year there were more teachers of English in the former Soviet Union than there were students of the Russian language in the United States. In this regard, S. 1150 substantially strengthens the Federal commitment to foreign language study. It includes several of my initiatives providing funding for consortia based foreign study and for the development of much needed foreign language instructional materials. Additionally, this measure includes language to clarify the ability of students to apply Federal assistance to study abroad opportunities.

Mr. President, there are several issues which have not been addressed in this legislation. In particular, many expected to see the inclusion of a direct loan demonstration program in this legislation. The creation of a direct loan program is certainly an interesting idea, as it would make a new resource available to students. I do however have some serious concerns regarding the design and long-term impact of such a program and look forward to working with Senators PELL, KENNEDY, BRADLEY, and BENTSEN when it comes before the Senate within the next few weeks.

One measure, that I was most disappointed to see removed from the bill, was the Pell grant entitlement. This provision would have assured students and families of the Federal Government's commitment to higher education for all students who qualify. I hope that the day will soon come when we as a nation recognize that education is not an expense, it is an investment.

I fully believe, Mr. President, that with this legislation we begin to move in the right direction—resources available to students are increased, access is restored to middle-income families who were to a great extent cut out of these programs during the 1980's and program integrity is enhanced. S. 1150 renews the Federal Government's strong commitment to quality higher education. In this regard, I urge my colleagues to join me in voting for passage of this critical measure.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I rise today to draw attention to a problem currently facing students in my own State of West Virginia, and to alert my colleagues that other States may soon face similar concerns. To respond to this issue, I am grateful that the leadership on both sides has accepted my amendment calling for a thorough study of this issue.

Everyone is troubled about the issue of defaults.

We are all deeply worried by stories of fraud and abuse.

However, fraudulent schools exist. The horror stories prove they exist. These schools lure students with promises of quality education and new job opportunities, push students to take out guaranteed student loans without fully explaining the financial obligations attached, and then fail to follow through on their promises of quality training and education. Fraudulent schools leave students in the lurch. The students never receive the education promised, yet they incur thousands of dollars of debt.

This is unfair to the students.

I commend the leadership for the efforts made in this bill to address the problems of fraud and abuse in the student loan programs. I fully support the provisions to strengthen safeguards in the Higher Education Act to ensure that students are fully informed about their loan obligations. I agree that measures to strengthen the accreditation process are sorely needed. And I am confident that these reforms will dramatically reduce the problems of fraud and abuse in the Federal student financial aid programs.

But today, I rise to speak specifically about students who, under the current system, are caught in the middle.

Last summer, a West Virginia case involving student loans attracted national attention. The case, known as the Tipton case, involved about 2,000 students of a trade school in my State. The school recruited students, processed their loan applications with West Virginia banks, and then went bankrupt, leaving the students with GSL payments to make, and none of the promised training. Some of the students were midway through their courses when the school closed. They arrived for class one day to find the door padlocked.

The students never received the education promised, yet they were still responsible for their loans. Faced with the prospect of defaulting on their loans, the students filed a class-action suit, claiming that they had been misled by the school.

In a precedent-setting decision, the Federal judge called the defunct school's behavior unconscionable. I believe that we would all agree that the school victimized the students.

The decision went on to state that the students could sue under State or Federal law for protection from liability. Under consumer law in many States, including West Virginia, banks can be held liable if they are deemed as business partners to fraudulent companies.

In response to the Tipton case, West Virginia banks maintain that private lenders in the Federal GSL Program are not subject to legal action based on school misconduct. While the lenders are sympathetic to the plight of the students, they do not believe that they should be held liable for the loans. The case is under appeal.

Before going any further, I must state that I am not a judge and that I have no intention of passing judgment on this pending case. The Tipton decision must work its way through the judicial process, and my statement is not intended to cast judgment on what is already a complicated situation.

But I am concerned about the case's impact on the availability of GSL's in West Virginia and across the country.

Following the Tipton decision, West Virginia banks are fearful that they, rather than the Federal Government, will be responsible for the loans. If that happens, they warn, many banks will simply decide not to participate in the Federal Student Loan Program.

In fact, banks in my State are already starting to cut back on providing student loan services to avoid any future liability. According to a West Virginia newspaper, one bank had $41 million in outstanding student loans last year. This year, the same bank sold off all but $322,000 of the loans. Another bank once had a $20 million portfolio on student loans. Now they don't make GSL's. This trend drastically hurts access for all West Virginia students to much needed loans.

And this problem is not limited to West Virginia. The trend threatens to snowball across the country, as similar cases pending in California, Kentucky, New Jersey, and Texas develop. Given the Tipton ruling, we could see even more cases being filed.

Of course, a major concern is that the Tipton ruling will discourage banks across the country from participating in GSL's—cutting off access to student loans at a time when we need to encourage more Americans to invest in education. Clearly, Congress cannot sit by and allow student loans to disappear.

However, it is too early to predict the extent of Tipton's impact. Before developing an appropriate response, Congress needs more information on the case and its impact. With this goal in mind, I offer an amendment directing the Department of Education to conduct an indepth study of this issue and to report to Congress on their findings.

The amendment is simple. It requires the Secretary of Education to understake a study, in consultation with the Federal Trade Commission, on the following items:

Analysis of pending law;

Estimate of total borrowers filing for relief from loan repayment using fraud-based defenses;

Estimate of loan principal relieved annually through fraud-based defenses; and

Evaluation of the effects of the availability of a fraud-based defense on the accessibility of GSL's by geographical region.

The study will provide much needed information on the Tipton case and its impact on private lending institutions and students' access to GSL's. This case raises serious questions. To maintain our existing Federal student loan program, we must rely on the voluntary and active participation of banks across the country.

Access is essential, and we may need to take certain in the future to ensure that all eligible students have the opportunity to get a Federal financial aid, including guaranteed student loans. I believe that the study outlined by my amendment will help provide information needed on the critical issue.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am pleased the Senate has acted so quickly to reauthorize the Higher Education Act of 1965. I think we have truly put aside our differences and worked together in a bipartisan effort to get a good bill—and with good reason: Education is far too important a subject to quibble about. When we are continually bombarded with accounts of how our country is going to have a difficult time remaining competitive in a world market, it is imperative we do all we can to encourage our students to enter college where they can learn the skills they need to get a good job and compete in a world economy.

There are many provisions of this bill I am pleased with, because I believe they fulfill the greater objective of the HEA—expanding access to higher education for the many Americans who have found, more and more frequently, that the costs of attending college are getting out of their reach. Therefore, one of our primary challenges in this reauthorization was to develop different ways to improve the balance between grant and loan aid. Loans have begun to replace grant aid as a major source of student aid; consequently, many students incur considerable debt to attend college.

With the many changes to student loan programs, I think we have taken considerable steps to address this imbalance. We have, for example, increased the limit for Stafford loans to $3,000 for full-time, first-year college students, reaching a maximum of $5,500 for those who complete at least 2 years of school. We have eliminated home and farm equity for families with income levels below $50,000 per year when determining a student's financial need. And we have allowed dependent students to borrow under supplemental loans for students, regardless of income, if they can demonstrate they are creditworthy. These are all positive steps that will keep financial aid accessible to the middle class. I think we need to do what we can to make financial aid available to the students who require it, and not just to the very poor. Middle-income students often have had a very limited choice in financial aid programs. This bill expands those opportunities.

I often hear from students in New Mexico who express their frustration with the lengthy and often tedious application process for financial aid. We have addressed this issue as well by establishing a single model for determining eligibility for all student aid programs authorized under title IV of the bill. This new model relies on a simple needs test. S. 1150 also requires a simplification of the application process so that students receiving aid can apply for continued assistance without paying for a new application process.

This bill also reauthorizes a program that has proven to be a success in my home State of New Mexico—special programs for students from disadvantaged backgrounds, or TRIO. The TRIO programs encourage students from disadvantaged backgrounds to attend college and get their degrees. Countless numbers of New Mexican students have benefitted from this program—and I want to commend the educators of New Mexico who have worked so hard to make this program a success—so I am very pleased we have continued with this noteworthy program.

I am also pleased with title V of the bill, which focuses on recruitment, retention, and development of educators. Providing access to higher education for students means nothing if good teachers aren't in the classroom to teach them. Title V recognizes as well that some of the best educators are often those who may not have a teaching certificate, and therefore authorizes a program to help States establish alternative routes to certification of teachers and principals. This will allow those who have demonstrated a high level of competence in a chosen profession to pursue a career in the education field, where their expertise is sorely needed. I am a staunch supporter of alternative certification, and I am, therefore, pleased we are taking steps to initiate these programs.

Title V also creates a program to provide annual scholarships of up to $5,000 to meet educational expenses of prospective teachers. Because we cannot always find enough good people to teach on Indian reservations in New Mexico—and Senators AKAKA and MURKOWSKI had expressed similar concerns about getting teachers for Native Alaskans and Hawaiians—I am pleased the Senate has included my amendment that would give special consideration to students who express an intent to teach these underserved groups. And because of our concerns about our students finishing at or near the bottom in international math or science tests, we have also included my language to give special consideration to students who intend to teach math or science.

Senator BINGAMAN and I have also included a provision to encourage the expansion cooperative educational programs between State education agencies and private sector establishments involved in education between the United States and Mexico. Senator BINGAMAN and I both agree that our unique relationship with our neighboring countries can play an important role in improving education, and I am pleased our amendment was accepted.

Mr. President, this bill goes a long way toward restoring the buying power of Federal student loans, and ensuring that financial aid remains accessible to all Americans who require it. The reauthorization of the Higher Education Act reconfirms our commitment to providing educational opportunities to more and more students. It is an investment in our own future.

ACCESS SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. As I mentioned in my opening statement, I believe that an extremely important feature of this bill is its attempt to address the issue of adequate preparation for higher education. Your initiative with the Access Scholarship Program is certainly an important step in this direction.

I would like to raise a couple of questions with the Senator from Massachusetts regarding that program.

Mr. KENNEDY. By all means.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. First of all, I would like to say that basing eligibility for an access scholarship on the completion of a rigorous academic curriculum in high school is an excellent way to encourage high expectations and achievement on the part of students. I find this approach preferable, say, to basing the extra awards on test scores. At the same time, I believe that we want to encourage students not only to take demanding course but also to perform well in them. Would the Senator not agree?

Mr. KENNEDY. Absolutely. As we look toward conference, I would be happy to work with the Senator from Kansas to develop some additional language that would clarify this point.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. I thank the Senator and would raise one more point. As currently written, a student must take the rigorous curriculum in high school and must also participate in some type of early intervention program.

I certainly believe early intervention programs are important and would hope that they will continue to grow. At the same time, I can foresee any number of circumstances which might arise where a student simply would not be able to participate. That student might be one who takes challenging courses and excels in them, yet he or she would not be eligible for an access scholarship. It seems to me that such a student is at a double disadvantage—first, by being unable to participate in an early intervention program and, second, by being ineligible for a scholarship. Would the Senator be amenable to a proposal to eliminate the additional requirement for participation in an early intervention program?

Mr. KENNEDY. The linkage between the two was included in my proposal because I feel it is critical that we encourage both challenging course work and the development of early intervention programs. At the same time, I believe the Senator makes a very good point that students should not be harmed when, through no fault of their own, they are not able to be involved with a formal early intervention program. I would certainly be willing to consider a change that would decouple the two.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. I thank the Senator and look forward to continuing to work with him on this important effort.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I want to state my strong support for the provisions in S. 1150, the Higher Education Amendments of 1991, which pertain to expanding the number and enhancing the skills of those serving in the teaching profession.

As I stated during the debate on the Neighborhood Schools Improvement Act, many of us are troubled by the fact that the public schools are struggling with a teacher shortage. All too few of the individuals enrolled in our colleges and universities, especially the brightest and most gifted students, are electing teaching careers. Consequently, many elementary and secondary school students do not receive the benefit of instruction from new teachers who have specialized training. Likewise, many of our students are not exposed to instructors who can inspire students by their own example to enjoy the rewards of study in challenging disciplines. S. 1150 addresses the teacher shortage by incorporating and reauthorizing many of the provisions of the National Teacher Act of 1990 and including important new initiatives to attract individuals to the teaching profession.

The Teacher Corps Scholarship Program will provide an important incentive to individuals to enter the teaching profession. Scholarship funds for students participating in the program also will diminish the barrier that large educational loans have represented in prohibiting entry to the teaching profession. A 3-year scholarship signals to college students that the national commitment to expanding the number of teachers is real, and need only be matched by their commitment to serve the Nation's children in the classroom in order to improve our schools.

The teacher corps provisions of S. 1150 are also important in that program participants will be placed in schools with the greatest levels of need. Schools in communities struggling with poverty, crime, violence, and drugs ought to be havens, where young people are encouraged to strive for and attain high levels of achievement. The placement of highly trained and motivated teachers in such schools represents a continued commitment to our public schoolchildren to provide opportunities for educational advancement and personal development, regardless of their circumstances.

S. 1150 also recognizes the important contributions that are made to our schools by individuals already in the teaching profession by funding establishment of academies for teachers to upgrade their skills, and by creating a program to recruit paraprofessionals or school aides to become teachers. Individuals currently in teaching have a valuable base of knowledge and should be encouraged to sharpen those skills. Others employed in our schools as instructors or aides should receive credit for in-service experience and have opportunities to become teachers. Their commitment to educate children is evident and must be rewarded with assistance in furthering their education or in the acquisition of appropriate certifications for teaching in their States.

We know that parents and communities stand ready to improve their schools. The teacher corps provisions in S. 1150 offer important assistance to these efforts.

Before closing, I want to commend the Senate's Committee on Labor and Human Resources and its Subcommittee on Education for their work on the entire higher education bill, and in particular their chairmen, respectively: my colleague, the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] and the distinguished senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL]. They and the members of the subcommittee and full committee have crafted an excellent bill. It recognizes that America can only maintain its enviable standard of living, and spread that standard more equitably among all citizens of the Nation, if we regain and maintain our competitiveness. And, Mr. President, we can only reach the objective if we have a literate and educated population. This bill makes great strides in our essential effort to achieve this goal. I am pleased to give it my strong support and to offer commendations to all who were involved in its development.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, before we move to final passage of the reauthorization of the Higher Education Act, I would like to thank my staff who spent a great deal of time on this bill: Bob Shireman, my chief education adviser, Brian Kennedy, the staff director of my subcommittee, and Alice Celio and Barbara King, who helped to field so many of the calls and letters on the issues in this bill. My press office has also been especially active and effective: my press secretary David Carle, his deputy Chris Ryan, and Marcy Saack, who tirelessly responded with faxes and packets when the media needed information.

All of the staff of my colleagues on the Labor and Human Resources Committee also deserve thanks for their hard work. I think the fact that we were able to finish this bill in less than 24 hours is a testament to their skill in addressing the various concerns that have been raised over the past several months, and over the past year.

I would also like to also give special thanks to Orlo Austin, the director of financial aid at the University of Illinois at Champaign-Urbana. Orlo worked in my subcommittee office during 4 months of administrative leave from the university, and he even contributed an additional month of his time when we needed more help. When he started, the committee was in the process of pulling together the staff recommendations on the reauthorization. Orlo really hit the ground running, analyzing proposals, asking the questions that forced the real policy issues to be addressed, and developing alternatives that could come only from someone with his experience in the financial aid field. This bill is better because of his generosity.

Finally, notably absent from the floor during this debate was Kim Wallace of the majority leader's staff. We knew that the higher education bill was likely to come up on the floor this week because Kim's wife, Robin Vink, was due to have their baby on March 1. Waiting until next week to bring the bill up would have meant that Kim might be called away. Well, as fate would have it, little Harrison James, 8 pounds, 7 ounces, conspired to keep Kim from the floor and was born on Wednesday night. I wish them all the best.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on final passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report to accompany H.R. 2212, a bill respecting the extension of most-favored-nation trade treatment with the People's Republic of China, on Tuesday, February 25 at 10:30 a.m., and that the Senate proceed to vote on the adoption of the conference report at 4:30 p.m. on that day, with the Senate standing in recess for the two party conferences from 12:30 p.m. until 2:30 p.m., with the time under the control of the two leaders or their designees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, we will momentarily vote on the final passage of the higher education bill. There will be no further rollcall votes today. There will be no rollcall votes on Monday.

On Tuesday, in accordance with the agreement just obtained, we will begin at 10:30 a.m. on the China MFN bill, and the vote on that bill will occur at 4:30. There will be 4 hours of debate on that conference report, two in the morning and then two following the recess for the respective party conferences.

So the next rollcall vote will be Tuesday at 4:30 on the China MFN conference report.

I commend the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, Senator PELL, along with Senator KENNEDY and Senator KASSEBAUM for the extraordinary diligence with which the legislation that we are about to vote on has been dealt with here in the Senate.

Originally, when we determined to call this bill up, it was expected that the bill would take 3 days. It has been done in much less than that—really, about 1 full day, beginning yesterday afternoon and concluding this morning. For that, the managers deserve great credit.

This week, the Senate has enacted two major bills—the energy bill and the higher education bill—and I think that is a most productive week. As I indicated earlier, we will be back on Tuesday with the China MFN conference report, and on that day, I will state our intentions regarding the schedule for the rest of the week, following consultation with the distinguished Republican leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. FORD. I announce that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN], the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DIXON], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. FOWLER], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN], and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. KERREY], are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON], would vote "aye."

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CRAIG] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

SEC. 1302. NATIONAL COMMISSION ON INDEPENDENT EDUCATION.

"PART J—NATIONAL COMMISSION ON INDEPENDENT EDUCATION

"SEC. 1391. SHORT TITLE.

"This part may be cited as the 'National Independent Colleges and Universities Discovery Act'.

"SEC. 1392. FINDINGS.

"The Congress finds that—

"(1) the quality and scope of higher education in our Nation is without argument the finest in the world, and a distinguishing feature of our Nation's system of higher education is its strong and diverse nonprofit independent sector;

"(2) independent colleges and universities are as diverse as the Nation itself and include traditional liberal arts institutions, major research universities, church- and faith-related colleges, colleges and universities primarily attended by minorities, women's colleges, junior colleges, and schools of law, medicine, engineering, business and other professions;

"(3) the diversity of independent colleges and universities offers students a choice in the type of educational experience that will best serve such students' interests, needs and aspirations;

"(4) independent colleges and universities enroll 21 percent of all students in the United States, award 33 percent of all bachelor's degrees in the United States, 42 percent of all such master's degrees, 36 percent of all such doctoral degrees, and 59 percent of all such professional degrees;

"(5) a majority of all undergraduate students attending independent colleges and universities receive some form of financial assistance, and such independent colleges and universities provide such financial assistance from their own resources;

"(6) independent colleges and universities are deeply involved in hundreds of partnerships with elementary and secondary schools, and such partnerships are largely funded by such colleges and universities;

"(7) independent colleges and universities have been an extraordinary example of private-public partnerships, with such colleges and universities operating in the public interest to provide a public good;

"(8) less than 20 percent of the revenue of independent colleges and universities comes from governmental funds, most of which is in the form of Federal and State financial aid;

"(9) decreases in Federal and State support for student financial aid programs has placed at risk the option of choosing an independent college or university for an increasing number of students;

"(10) whereas at the turn of the twentieth century 80 percent of the students enrolled in higher education in the United States were enrolled in independent colleges and universities, such percentage has now declined to 21 percent, and further erosions place at risk the option of choosing an independent college or university for students and parents; and

"(11) the entire sector of independent colleges and universities and the important contributions such sector makes to our Nation is at risk and deserves national policy attention.

"SEC. 1393. PURPOSE.

The purpose of such grants is to enable such tribes to make scholarships available to tribal members to assist such members to pursue courses of study leading to an undergraduate or postbaccalaureate degree in order to provide professionally trained tribal members to support such economic development initiatives on Indian reservations.

(b) DESIGNATION.—A scholarship awarded under this part shall be referred to as an "American Indian Post-Secondary Economic Development Scholarship" (hereafter referred to in this part as "scholarship").

THE CASE OF THE IRISH GIRL

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, this morning's Washington Post carried a deeply troubling editorial entitled "The Case of the Irish Girl."

Over the past several days, international attention has been drawn to the plight of a 14-year-old rape victim who is being denied the right to travel from the Republic of Ireland to obtain an abortion. This tragic situation has become the ultimate example of the injustice that can occur when any government chooses to interfere with the reproductive rights of women. It is a case that should give citizens of this Nation further reason to express vocal opposition to any further erosion of women's reproductive rights in our own legal system.

Abortion is illegal in the Republic of Ireland, but it is legal in England. When this young rape victim and her parents attempted to travel to England, and I want to emphasize this young rape victim and her parents attempted to travel to England, to secure a legal abortion as more than 4,000 other Irish women choose to do each year, they were denied the right to travel. She is now, in effect, a prisoner of conscience, held against her will, being forced to carry to term the result of a rape.

I have today expressed my deep concern about this violation of this young woman's basic human rights of Ambassador Gallagher, and I call upon my colleagues who share my sense of shock and dismay to do likewise.

Those of us who recognize the basic rights involved, and they are very basic rights, should join with the President of the Republic of Ireland, Mary Robinson, the new President, and other prominent Irish citizens, including Sinead O'Connor, in calling for a reversal of this outrageous decision.

Mr. President, I call upon the Supreme Court of Ireland to free this Irish girl and I ask unanimous consent that the Washington Post editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Feb. 21, 1992]

THE CASE OF THE IRISH GIRL

A tragic case that dramatizes the real issues at stake in the abortion debate has caused an uproar in Ireland. A 14-year-old girl who was allegedly raped by the father of her best friend has been prohibited by a court from leaving the country to get an abortion in Britain. Abortion has been banned by statute in Ireland since the middle of the last century, and that law was reinforced by constitutional amendment following a referendum in 1983. Nevertheless, until now authorities have turned a blind eye toward abortions obtained by Irish women abroad. It has been estimated that a minimum of 4,000 a year go to Britain for the procedure.

The current case is a personal nightmare for the girl and her family and a political nightmare for the newly installed Irish government. The facts compel great sympathy for the teenager, and the response has been international. Even at home, where voters had supported a ban on abortion by a two-to-one majority only nine years ago, there has been a shocked, even embarrassed reconsideration of the law. Both the judge who granted the injunction and the new prime minister Albert Reynolds, described the situation as "painful and distressing [having resulted] in tragedy and a great measure of human suffering." And in spite of the fact that the attorney general was the moving party in court, the government has offered the family assistance in appealing the decision to the Supreme Court. None of this, of course, can be of much immediate consolation to the child who is carrying a child.

The government has reason for concern on other fronts too. Installed only 48 hours before this case broke, Mr. Reynold's cabinet had already given signs it would move for the reconsideration of law and policy in the area of divorce and contraception. The former is now unavailable in Ireland, and access to the latter is restricted to married couples. Now it must grapple with the more difficult abortion question, which stirs fierce debate and may require a constitutional amendment. Further, the controversy will surely complicate matters for Ireland in the European Community, where challenges to this aspect of Irish law have already been brought before the European Court of Justice, whose rulings bind member nations. Finally, the case cannot help in the long-running struggle to unite Ireland, for it is exactly this kind of restriction, founded on deeply held religious and moral views, that reinforces the determination of Protestants to resist union.

In this country, abortion is usually debated in the abstract, in terms of women's rights, constitutional principles or theories about when life begins. But there is no escaping the concrete facts of what happens to individuals when all abortions are banned, as they were in most states until 1973. A 14-year-old Irish girl has brought that reality home.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, this is a matter of grave conscience. It is also a matter where the parents, the President of the Republic and many people of conscience are joining to say, free this young woman; give her an opportunity in her life to proceed with basic dignity and protections that she should have. We want also these basic protections for women of the United States. I hope both will occur.

I yield the floor.

HAITI

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, 141 days have passed since military thugs in Haiti violently ousted Haiti's first freely elected democratic government. Today, the 142d day of military rule, the thugs are no closer to leaving the Presidential palace than when they shot their way into power on September 30. We have spent 4 fruitless months trying to negotiate their departure and a restoration of democracy. Our policy has failed.

Failure is producing resignation and a dangerous indecisiveness that threatens the democratic gains throughout this hemisphere.

Mr. President, we are at a crossroads. We have two choices. We can acquiesce and cut a face-saving deal that will leave the thugs in Port-au-Prince effectively in power. If we do, we will send the wrong signal to the hemisphere's would-be dictators that we are not serious about the protection of democracy.

A second alternative is to adopt a hard-hitting policy that we will restore legitimate civilian rule and signal civilian governments around the region that we care about their democratic futures. I fear that we are following the first path, the path of acquiescence and accommodation. We have already eased the embargo approved by the Organization of American States. We continue to pursue endless negotiation with the thugs who stole democracy from the Haitian people.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a February 24, 1992, Newsweek article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Newsweek, Feb. 24, 1991]

HAITI: "WE COULD TURN OUR BACK"

Washington has returned thousands of refugees, eased its embargo—and all but abandoned the fight against the nasty little coup in the Caribbean.

"This coup must not and will not succeed." That was the vow Secretary of State James Baker made in October before a special meeting of the Organization of American States devoted to the crisis in Haiti. It came as the United States joined members of the OAS in a regional embargo aimed at reinstating. Haiti's first democratically elected president, Jean-Bertrand Aristide.

But four months later, the coup still stands. The military gang that took power on Sept. 29 remains in control; the sanctions have only hurt the Haitian poor, made life more difficult for the tiny middle class and enriched the even tinier oligarchy, with which the military runs the country like a plantation. And this month President Bush unilaterally eased the embargo. In effect, he all but threw up his hands. Haiti's provisional government has defiantly promoted the general whose removal is Aristide's main condition for a negotiated settlement. Meanwhile, America's forced repatriation of Haitian refugees has left Bush open to charges of racism and turned the Haitian masses against him. To them, it looks as though a two-bit army has stared down the world's greatest military power.

Bush can afford a policy failure in Haiti. It has little strategic significance and no powerful U.S. constituency. And Aristide is a problematic ally. He foolishly tried to take on the army, the oligarchy and the church all at once. His rhetoric at times even condoned violence. Just after the coup, Bush received Aristide in the Oval Office, but relations have since deteriorated. Last week Aristide accused Bush of abandoning the fight. Some policymakers now say that the United States should never have signed off on the OAS's insistence on restoring Aristide. Talk of military intervention has turned to speculation about walking away altogether. Says one diplomat: "We could turn our back on Haiti and let it fall into the abyss."

By electing Aristide, a priest who promised a fair division of the country's wealth, many Haitians hoped they could put an end to decades of rule by brutal and corrupt leaders. And as far as they were concerned, the United States shared responsibility for that legacy. It invaded Haiti in 1915 and stayed until 1934. It created the country's thuggish joint military and police force. For years it supported the notorious Francois (Papa Doc) Duvalier because he espoused anti-communism. Today, almost any Cuban who can reach Miami is granted political asylum. Yet Washington went to court to win a ruling classifying thousands of Haitians as economic, not political, refugees. Now the U.S. Coast Guard is sending back most of the Haitians who have fled to America since Aristide's ouster.

Haiti's oligarchs, who cheered the coup against the populist Aristide, feel vindicated. Bush's tepid support for Aristide has convinced them that America, Haiti's main trading partner, ultimately is on their side. During a beach party he hosted last week, an heir to one of Haiti's top families observed: "We know the golden rule: whoever has the gold rules." Whatever Haiti's political future, the wealthy seem sure that it won't include the wholesale empowerment Aristide promised his constituency. They also maintain that economic growth under a strong-arm government is better for the masses than redistribution of a shrinking pie. "We're doing it backwards," says the host. "Jobs, taxes, this is the beginning of democracy. One election doesn't make democracy."

But the Haitian rich pay few taxes, even though they rake in the lion's share of the nation's wealth (box). One reason they hated Aristide was that he forced them to pay up—and raised government spending in one of the stingiest countries of the world. Until 1986, some superrich businessmen enjoyed monopolies granted by Duvalier and his son, "Baby Doc." Those are gone, but the fortunes they created remain. The Brandts, the Mews, the Nadals, the Vorbes, the Madsens, the Behrmannas—Haiti's great families, almost all light-skinned mulattoes, live in luxury on the mountains overlooking Port-au-Prince's wretched slums. So do those who have made fortunes in smuggling.

Some members of the elite acknowledge that they have done nothing to improve conditions for the 90 percent of the population that is unschooled and barely fed. But others talk about the country's conditions with a kind of willful disbelief. "I ask myself, how much poverty is there, really, in the country?" said a dentist lolling poolside at the Pétionville Club. "You see a beggar and you might think he was poor, but he is taking the money he gets and practicing usury." Comments about police repression show similar callousness. One man compared the smell left after soldiers break up a demonstration to the aroma "after your wife sprays Flit in a room." Over shrimp brochette, another defends the coup, in spite of its violence. "Look, how are you going to do this?" he asks. "The people who did this meant business, man. It was ideological—like Pinochet—the free market versus whatever you want to call it."

LAID OFF

The U.S. response to the inequities in Haiti has been to try to create a middle class, the classic engine of economic and political progress. Much of that hope hinged on the "assembly sector," U.S.-financed factories that employed 40,000 workers. In its original form, the U.S. embargo blocked Haiti from exporting these products; strategists thought the new industrial class would line up against the coup. The assembly sector's leaders did call for the negotiated return of Aristide but never went further. Meanwhile, nearly 30,000 workers have been laid off. "The [bosses] disappointed us, didn't they," says one State Department official. Baker said easing the embargo may now save those jobs, but to others are doubtful, citing political instability and deteriorating infrastructure.

Some industrialists may simply have been too scared to fight the coup. Last month police broke in on René Théodore, the Communist candidate for prime minister who is supported by the United States and the OAS, as he was meeting with other politicians; they killed his bodyguard with a shot to the head. Last week, one U.S. and one British reporter went to the countryside to investigate reports of atrocities and were arrested. A local sheriff threatened to kill them, telling a colleague: "They know I burned the village; they know I killed people." A member of Parliament said he was stopped on the street and fired upon by men in civilian clothes; Théodore said his house was fired at. In winning its legal fight to repatriate the Haitian boat people, Washington argued, in effect, the Haitians may live in fear, but that doesn't entitle them to asylum. That may be so. But it remains to be seen how forgiving the military leaders will be of Haitians who supported Aristide and then fled when he was toppled. And while they wait to find out, many Haitians can only feel disappointed about a U.S. government that hailed democracy while it worked but seemed helpless to do anything when it came undone.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, this article records the sense of helplessness our ineffective policy has fostered in Haiti. We are being played for fools, and this is not the time for accommodation.

When I spoke in this Chamber on February 6, I urged the President to rally support for the use of force to restore Haiti's legitimate, democratically elected Government to power.

I was pleased to see the New York Times' editorial in favor of this proposal on February 19. I ask unanimous consent that the editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Feb. 19, 1992]

SAVE HAITI FROM ITS ARMY

Last September's coup in Haiti brought staggering consequences: more than 1,500 people murdered in the streets . . . tens of thousands fleeing in small boats to the U.S. and other neighboring lands . . . military conspirators emboldened throughout the hemisphere. These disasters derive from one narrow source, Haiti's brutish army, just 7,000 soldiers who terrorize a population of six million.

Haiti's neighbors, working through the Organization of American States, have tried to pressure army leaders. But their economic embargo has proved porous and their diplomatic proposals have been mocked. This month a blundering State Department eased some of the remaining pressure, inviting even greater contempt from Port-au-Prince.

To retrieve the situation, a more toughminded approach may be required: Send in armed O.A.S. peacekeepers to restore order and democracy.

Foreign intervention in political disputes is usually a bad idea. But in Haiti's case, it deserves serious consideration.

One reason outsiders can play a constructive role is that they would be supporting a basic choice already made by Haitians. A million and a half voters overwhelmingly elected Jean-Bertrand Aristide as President 14 months ago. By all accounts, he still commands majority support.

A significant and economically powerful minority, however, opposes President Aristide and fears what might happen if he returns. An O.A.S. force could reassure these people, essential to Haiti's economic functioning, that their rights will be protected from vengeful Aristide partisans.

The army might not politely step aside. But it could, being small, be pushed aside. Should the army resist, to protect its drug and other smuggling rackets, it would find little popular support.

The O.A.S. traditionally dislikes intervening anywhere because Latin American states fear setting precedents that could weaken their own sovereignty. Those fears would be eased if no U.S. troops took part. Most Latin governments now have an equally strong stake in avoiding a different precedent, a successful military coup. Events in Venezuela this month sent shudders through several presidential palaces.

As long as the Haitian army thwarts all attempts at diplomacy, it's hard to see any political remedy for Haiti's suffering. The first need seems increasingly clear: Neutralize the army's tyrannical power.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, the New York Times historically has counseled caution in situations of the type we now face in Haiti. We all share with our OAS allies a natural dislike for intervention. But I submit that intervention is the only way to restore democracy in Haiti. As the Times points out, an OAS peacekeeping force could reassure all sides, both supporters and opponents of President Aristide, that their safety will be provided and democracy restored.

In addition to military force, Mr. President, I urge the President to take these additional steps: First, we must make life as difficult for those now in power as we can. For example, if they have U.S. visas, we should cancel them. If they have assets in the United States, we should seize them. We should pressure our allies to do the same thing. Our Government is still collecting information on those in power. We need now to act on that information. We need to act now.

Second, we must continue to uphold our laws. That means that those seeking asylum receive fair and thorough hearings. If their return to Haiti would endanger them, they should be allowed to apply for asylum in this country.

Third, the OAS should establish an on-the-ground tracking system to assure the safety of those who are returned.

Four, the OAS should toughen those parts of the embargo in effect and to target violators.

The OAS should establish a multinational force that could be on standby for use in future situations such as we now face in Haiti.

Finally, the United States should continue to reform its International Military Education Training Program to reflect the need for a more civically oriented military geared to preserving democracy, not destroying it, particularly among the nations of Latin America and the Caribbean.

Mr. President, when it comes to Haiti, we are selling democracy short. We are settling for short-term palliatives when we should be making a long-term commitment to restoring democracy. We are making a serious mistake that could well undermine civilian democratic leadership in this region for years to come, and I urge the President to lead our OAS allies to renew their commitment to restoring democracy in Haiti.

Meanwhile, Mr. President, the Bush administration's inaction on restoring democracy to Haiti is having a serious impact here in the United States of America.

In fact, the administration's lack of a consistent policy during the refugee crisis has hurt everyone involved—the Haitians who have fled the country, State and local governments, particularly in my State of Florida and around the country, and the Federal Government itself. Up until about a week ago, the State of Florida was assured that all Haitians who were admitted to the United States for asylum processing would first be tested for excludable, contagious diseases, and would arrive in Miami with a work permit in hand.

Without any notification to the State, that policy was abruptly reversed.

After the Supreme Court ruled on repatriation, the administration has instituted a policy which I believe will have grave consequences.

Since February 11, all Haitians who are interdicted on the high seas have been interviewed by immigration officials on the Coast Guard cutters.

Those whom officials determine to have colorable asylum claims are then brought to Miami, not Guantanamo, without further processing. I underscore "without further processing."

Krome Processing Center in Miami, the destination for Haitians who are screened in, that is, found to have a colorable claim for political asylum, by immigration officials, is a temporary processing facility.

As recently as early January of this year, Mr. President, when I visited Krome, their medical facilities were limited. They were not providing, for instance, blood tests to determine if persons admitted for processing were HIV positive.

So far, approximately 220 of the Haitians who have been approved to apply for asylum in the United States have tested positive for the HIV virus. Like numbers have had syphilis and active tuberculosis.

Krome is not a hospital. It does not have the capability to quarantine large numbers of people with infectious diseases. In fact, Krome does not have the capability to serve as a processing center for a large number of people and still remain viable in the event of a much larger immigration emergency than the one we are facing today.

Justice Department officials confirmed to me their intention is to fill Krome to 33 percent beyond its capacity during this operation. That estimate is probably low.

I believe that we are shooting ourselves in the foot by rendering ourselves incapable to respond to a larger or separate refugee influx.

More importantly, filling Krome to emergency levels is further evidence that this current crisis is an immigration emergency. There is a $35 million fund available for emergencies like this, and I call upon the President and the Attorney General yet again to release this money to help pay the tremendous costs of this emergency.

While the Department of Justice has now stated that there would be full medical screenings provided once these persons are brought to Krome, there will still be the threat to the community of a release of these persons after they have completed their screenings or the threat to the community of an overcrowded, tense, and potentially explosive situation inside the Krome Detention Center itself.

Here is an example of another type of cost which should be covered by the immigration emergency fund. On February 5 and again on February 10, the Justice Department took an action which symbolizes the point I have been making about Federal immigration policy for the last 11 years, that the Federal Government outright refuses to live up to the financial responsibility that it alone has the power to set.

In these two instances, Mr. President, two Haitians at Guantanamo Bay had medical emergencies which required immediate and expert attention not available at the naval base. They were brought to Miami for treatment. Miami has among the best medical professionals in the world. I am proud and pleased that we were able to provide treatment for those two seriously ill individuals.

However, the responsibility for paying for that treatment lies squarely with the Immigration and Naturalization Service. Yet in one of the boldest examples of sidestepping their responsibility, INS paroled those people from their custody so that they would not be legally responsible for their care.

One man, who had an eye operation, was covered by Medicaid at a 55 percent Federal-45 percent State cost allocation. The State of Florida cannot and should not absorb these or similar costs in the future. These disturbing developments will continue to be exacerbated until we address the root cause of that crisis, the internal unrest in Haiti caused by the seizure of democracy by military thugs.

Mr. President, we have arrived at the moment of truth. We are at the Munich of the Caribbean in Haiti. We are going to make a decision as was made in the 1930's as to whether we are going to acquiesce and accommodate military dictatorship or we are going to stand for the basic principles of democracy, the principles of the right of the people to select their governmental leaders.

That is the challenge before the United States. That is the challenge before the democracies of this hemisphere. The stage for that challenge is Haiti. The time to act is now. Our failure to act will represent a deep shadow of uncertain democracy in this new hemisphere.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

THE ECONOMY

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, much attention has been given in the last 6 months, justifiably, to the very sharp recession in which we find ourselves. In all of the discussions of the long-term economic strategy, almost no attention has been given to a very important set of issues related to our economy, related to our international trade position; and those are the issues of energy.

We have just completed an enormously important piece of legislation, the Senate energy bill, a reflection in part of the President's national energy strategy, a reflection in part of the Johnston-Wallop bill, a reflection in part of a great deal of work that came into the Congress from a variety of outside groups.

The importance of this piece of legislation for our economy cannot be understated. Energy is the lifeblood of this economy. We all take it for granted, unfortunately, and yet when it is threatened we react dramatically as we did in the Persian Gulf. We sent 500,000 young people to the Persian Gulf—not, I would suggest, to restore the legitimate government of Kuwait but because of our very deep concern about the interdiction and possible threat to energy supplies and that lifeblood to our economy.

I hope we learned a lesson from the Persian Gulf. And that is one of the reasons why we had such an overwhelming vote on the energy bill here earlier this week. We learned the lesson that we can no longer afford this enormous dependence on foreign oil. And we can no longer afford continually putting ourselves in the position of being dependent upon oil. We have to forge an independent strategy here at home, and that independent strategy must be one that weans us off of our dependence on oil, especially imported foreign oil.

I need not remind the occupant of the chair, who is very familiar with our situation, that more than 50 percent of our import problem, more than 50 percent of our balance of payments problem results from oil. We are importing an enormous amount of oil, almost 50 percent of our total usage in the country.

What do rational people do in that situation? They try to break into that cycle; reduce our dependence on foreign oil; increase our dependence on our own resources here at home. We have started to do that on this energy bill.

Earlier, I thanked Senator JOHNSTON and Senator WALLOP for their help on this, and Ensign Moore and Secretary Watkins, who pushed and pushed, as did Linda Stunns, from the Department of Energy, to get this to happen. We have come up with a construct that begins to move us in a direction of less dependence. We have done that at least in two very important ways, which I was very pleased to have spent a year trying to advance: First, alternatives to imported oil; and second, conservation and efficiency.

In the conservation and efficiency sections of the bill, we made major progress in a number of areas which are highly technical, as Chairman JOHNSTON pointed out, but incredibly important, ranging all the way from light bulbs: People assume that a light bulb is a light bulb. The lighting standards in that piece of legislation will allow us to save a great deal of energy.

Heating and air conditioning. It is obviously very important that those major uses of energy be as efficient as possible, and we have moved toward the basic setting of standards in that area which, long term, will be very important to our economy.

In other areas, extremely importnat are electric motors. We had, in the initial discussions of the bill, tremendous resistance to setting basic standards. Working with the industry groups over the last 6 months to a year, we have come up with an agreement on that major use of electricity. Most people do not think about electric motors, but they are extraordinarily consumptive of electricity and energy in our country. The standards we have set begin to bring down our use of energy there.

Building standards. We came to some agreements, and I hope that by the time we finish conference with the House of Representatives, we will have a broadly agreed upon set of standards relating to our housing stock, as we have in other areas.

Federal buildings. We have major incentive programs for individuals to save a great deal of energy and to make money doing so. I hope that that commitment gets reflected right here in our own backyard; that the Architect of the Capitol is as agressive as we have asked him to be, not only in this legislation, but in the previous Federal buildings legislation, and that he understands that we should be serious and set a model not only in our Capitol building here, but in all of the office buildings controlled by Congress.

We have a long way to go from our wasteful use of electricity here and wasteful use of energy. We can do a much better job, and I hope the Architect has received that message about the urgency to move out on this issue. We cannot say to the rest of the country, do one thing, and smugly not do that. That is one of the things that the American public is so angry about.

In that whole efficiency area, Al Stayman and Leslie Black of the Energy Committee were in there day in and day out, in very frustrating, long-term difficult negotiations with all of the industry groups on the outside and all of the groups on the inside. I thank them for their very, very good work on this front.

The other part of this bill that I think is truly a landmark, Mr. President, relates to natural gas. Yet, as we have this abundant fuel and are finding more and more of it, we are using less natural gas. As we know how dangerous our dependence is, we are using more and more imported oil. What an anomalous and exclusive situation to be in: Our abundant source, we are not using; our scarce source, which is expensive, we are using. That is not a very wise thing to do.

What we are doing in this bill is to try to sharply increase the demand for natural gas so that not only are we using a domestic resource, but we are backing out of that dangerous foreign resource. We have done that in a number of ways: The Public Utility Holding Company Act reform, that Senator JOHNSTON led the fight on—and I am glad we have made those changes; they were important to make. Alternative fuel vehicles, beginning with the Federal fleet and with overall fleet standards. Looking at increasing the use of natural gas as a vehicle fuel, my own Jeep Cherokee in Colorado is fueled with natural gas, as well as regular gasoline. It works perfectly fine. We have to do many more thousands, if not millions, and rapidly put up that increase in demand for using natural gas.

Natural gas is a winner for us in the United States. It is a domestic fuel, domestic meaning we are not as dependent on imported foreign oil. It is cheaper; less than half of the price, if you look at the overall composite price of oil. It is much, much cleaner than oil. It keeps the money right here at home.

So it is a win in so many ways for us to put a greater emphasis on natural gas, and that has begun in this piece of legislation, and I think begun in a very, very sound fashion.

I thank, on the committee, Sam Fowler and Don Santa, both of whom helped us a great deal in putting those complicated provisions together. They spent a great deal of time doing that, and I think very, very important steps are to be taken. These are difficult, technical, hidden issues. But as we talk about the economy, what we did on this bill—what we did relating to energy efficiency, relating to alternative fuels—is going to turn out, long term, probably to have been as important for our overall economic health as almost anything that we will do this year.

If we talk seriously about the needed investment strategy and changing our ways in this country, the investment strategy, investing in our own energy resources and bringing them to the American public, and doing that in a cheaper way, is going to pay off for every one of us. That is the kind of long-term investment strategy we have to continue to pursue in the United States.

Finally, I want to thank two members of my own staff, who have spent almost all of the last year working on these very difficult issues. Russ Shay and David Harwood have done a simply superb job, and I thank them as well.

Much maligned are staff members around the Hill. People talk about too many staff. People talk about people who are the imperial staff, and so on. The group I have referred to here, as well as Richard Grundy, and many members of the minority staff, who have worked on this bill, have been people who have spent all of these hours, stayed here day in and day out working on these arcane and very difficult and important issues. I thank them, as well.

Mr. President, finally, I want to include in the RECORD a very good piece written for USA Today on last Wednesday by T. Boone Pickens from Mesa Petroleum in Texas. Mr. Pickens has come to be known to many people through the merger and takeover activity of the 1980's. But beyond that, he has become a major leader in the battle for alternative fuel vehicles. He is the head of the Natural Gas Vehicle Coalition. He has really breathed a great deal of energy and new life into that issue. He has been very helpful on the outside. He wrote a good op-ed piece on curbing oil imports with natural gas.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[From USA Today, Feb. 19, 1992]

CURB OIL IMPORTS WITH NATURAL GAS

The U.S. Senate currently has an opportunity to pass a comprehensive, aggressive and visionary energy bill which will lead this country on a course to greater energy independence.

Rarely does Congress have the chance to do so much to clean up our environment, create jobs and lessen our dependence on imported crude oil as it does with passage of the National Energy Strategy.

Our thirst for imported crude oil has increased by 60% in the past six years. Today we rely on foreign oil for nearly 50% of our energy needs. This staggering addiction is taking a heavy toll on the U.S. economy. We paid more than $55 billion to foreign oil producers in Iran, Saudi Arabia and elsewhere in 1990, well over half our $101 billion trade deficit.

Because transportation accounts for two-thirds of all U.S. oil use, we're paying a stiff environmental price as well.

The National Energy Strategy can and should be a vehicle for change, the springboard to right this economic and environmental wrong. There is an abundant, clean-burning, superior, domestic fuel: American natural gas.

In transportation, we must begin substituting clean domestic natural gas for dirty foreign crude oil.

First, natural gas is an abundant American fuel competing against a foreign fuel.

Second, natural gas is the cleanest burning of all fossil fuels, emitting 80%-93% less reactive hydrocarbons and 90% less carbon monoxide than conventional gasoline.

Third, greater use of natural gas will create new jobs and jump-start the U.S. economy by leading to a significant reduction in the U.S. trade deficit.

Fourth, natural gas won't cause an environmental disaster. During 1990, there were over 15,000 reported oil spills in the U.S.A. There weren't any natural gas spills.

Fifth, natural gas is cheaper, more efficient, and safer than gasoline, and reduces operating and maintenance costs significantly. You can go twice as far on $10 worth of natural gas as you can on gasoline.

Because of the environmental awakening across the U.S.A. and the enactment of the federal Clean Air Act, there are several alternative fuels competing for market share. Each has positives and negatives. But only natural gas both reduces our dependence on foreign oil and reduces pollution.

While I'm optimistic about the long-term future of natural gas, I'm concerned that we're depleting this premium domestic resource at bargain-basement prices.

Isn't it reasonable that U.S. producers receive as much for their energy as we pay Kuwait, Iran or Saudi Arabia?

On a British thermal unit-equivalency basis, 6,000 cubic feet of natural gas provides as much energy as one barrel of crude oil. That 6-1 ratio jumps to 8 to 1 when the cost of transporting natural gas is taken into consideration. A barrel of foreign crude oil selling for $20 should result in a price of $2.50 per thousand cubic feet of domestic natural gas.

Last summer, domestic gas producers received as low as $1 per thousand cubit feet. This is a 60% discount to foreign energy. Does the U.S. consumer really want to pay foreign energy producers more for their energy than for American energy?

To make energy security a reality, the federal government must lead the way and set examples. It can begin by converting 10,000 government cars to alternative fuels such as natural gas in 1993, 20,000 in 1994 and 30,000 in 1995.

It's time for action. The bottom line is this: What's wrong with converting to a domestic resource that is environmentally superior, creates jobs, reduces the trade deficit, and is cheaper and more efficient than the foreign alternative?

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY, SENATOR KENNEDY

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, most of our colleagues have had called to their attention the fact that tomorrow will be the birthday of one of our distinguished colleagues. Senator KENNEDY's birthday is on February 22. I have known Senator KENNEDY now for 30 years, and I found him to be a talented, imaginative, intelligent, and friendly individual, with an enviable ability to dream of new possibilities for the country and for other human beings. Certainly, those of us who have known

Senator KENNEDY and worked with him over these many years can attest to the fact he possesses all of these qualities.

We know him as a deeply patriotic American from a family of patriotic Americans. We know Senator KENNEDY as a hardworking, farsighted, and conscientious Senator, whose efforts here in the Senate have brought forth fruit for the benefit of all Americans, as well as for the citizens of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

I have sincerely appreciated his friendship, his comradeship, and his colleagueship, all of which I have enjoyed over these many years of working together with Senator KENNEDY in the Senate on many projects and programs and issues of concern to us mutually and of concern to the people of West Virginia and of Massachusetts. I look forward to working with Senator KENNEDY many years into the future.

I know that I speak for all of our colleagues and for millions of people across America and around the world in wishing Senator KENNEDY the most joyful and eventful of birthdays on tomorrow and many, many more birthdays in the years ahead.

TRIBUTE TO THE BILL OF RIGHTS

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, our colleague, Senator BIDEN, was the keynote speaker on January 24, 1992, at the New Hampshire Bar Association's Annual Mid-Winter Meeting in Bedford, NH. Senator BIDEN gave an excellent speech in celebration of the bicentennial of the Bill of Rights, and his remarks received many commendations and compliments from the members of the bench and bar in attendance. In my view, the 200th anniversary of the ratification of the Bill of Rights has not received the attention it should, given the critical role those ten amendments to the Constitution have played in our Nation's development. I ask unanimous consent to include Senator BIDEN's speech in the RECORD as a permanent memorial of the New Hampshire Bar Association's year of celebration of the Bill of Rights.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE BILL OF RIGHTS: WHY HAS IT SUCCEEDED?

(Remarks by Senator Joseph R. Biden, Jr.)

Just a month ago—as our public life was dominated by talk of recession and the crisis in our health-care system, and our private lives were filled with final preparations for the holidays—a very important occasion passed by, largely unnoticed. Though we celebrated it hardly at all, it is, in fact, a landmark in the history of human freedom: the 200th anniversary of the ratification of the Bill of Rights.

Unlike the 1976 Bicentennial, for this anniversary, no tall ships sailed. There were no televised parades; few bands played and no floats rolled. No markets were shut down, and no shops were closed. It was, in short, simply another day in the life of America.

Yet nothing testifies more eloquently to the success of our Bill of Rights than the fact that millions of Americans passed its 200th anniversary going about their own business—laughing and loving; arguing and agreeing; buying and selling; praising and protesting—without having to give a moment's thought to the document that protects their right to do whatever it was that they were doing.

Notwithstanding that the Bill of Rights' birthday was observed unwittingly by most Americans, we lawyers have a special obligation to remember this anniversary and the great document it memorializes. And with all due respect, I suspect that we lawyers do not pay nearly as much attention as we should to the Constitution and the Bill of Rights, and to educating our fellow Americans about the critical importance of both. For it is both our privilege and our responsibility as lawyers to understand, defend and champion the system of legal rights and remedies that rests, ultimately, on the Bill of Rights. So I think it fitting that we pause and reflect on this anniversary, and it is my thoughts on this occasion that I would like to share with you this evening.

This celebration of our Bill of Rights—of the duration and stability of our system—comes at a time when nations all over the world are considering radical reforms of their own governments. Many of them are looking at our Bill of Rights as a model, and they are asking why it has succeeded so long and so well in this country. Why has our Bill of Rights played such a vital role in shaping our free society, while similar documents in other countries have been ignored or abused? Why has this charter—unlike any other document, in any other country, before or since—succeeded in protecting our freedom for two centuries while others have failed?

This is a question that is important not only to people who seek to emulate our success in other countries; it is also important to Americans, and especially to American lawyers. It is important, as we seek to understand what the Bill of Rights has meant to us; important, as we seek to give it definition for the century ahead.

Neither the question nor its answer is as simple as it may at first appear.

There are several answers commonly offered to explain the success of our Bill of Rights. Some have said that the Bill of Rights has triumphed because it protects critical, specific rights: freedom of speech and religion, the right to a fair trial, freedom of assembly, and so on. By selecting these specific freedoms for protection, it is said, the Bill of Rights has created the framework for our free society.

I disagree.

Yes, the freedoms specifically protected by the Bill of Rights are important—but the document's continuing success can not be explained by its selection of certain specific rights for protection. The old Soviet Bill of Rights claimed to protect more than 200 specific rights—but for three-quarters of a century, the Soviet people suffered under one of the most thoroughly totalitarian societies recorded in human history. No—no mere laundry list of rights is enough to build a free society like ours.

Others have said that the success of the Bill of Rights has derived from the very breadth of its wording; its sweeping phrases that have allowed for growth and expansion of its meaning over time—phrases like "due process of law" and "cruel and unusual punishment."

Again, I disagree.

Yes, the document's expansive phrasing has given it the potential for timelessness and adaptability, and that potential is certainly one of its most important qualities. But, again, other countries have devised expansively phrased bills of rights that, in the end, have failed to protect anything. The French Declaration of the Rights of Man of 1789, for example, broadly embraced such sweeping concepts as "dignity" and "equality"—but did nothing to prevent the bloody political persecution that began just months after it was issued.

Breadth of text alone is not enough to insure success, and neither is adaptability the answer, for some of the most important protections the Bill of Rights provides us are not the product of "growth," but are, in fact, rooted deeply and unchangeably in our history.

Finally, many have cited the genius of James Madison and his colleagues in the first Congress as the secret of the Bill of Rights' success. For example, their decision to incorporate the fundamental freedoms of speech and religion into the very first amendment is often pointed to as an act of great foresight.

But the fact is that when the Bill of Rights was drafted, what we now know as the First Amendment was actually the third amendment; two others that were not ratified by the states were listed before today's "first freedoms." So chance, more than genius, has determined the numbers by which our rights have come to be known. More seriously, the simple truth is that however ingenious our Founders were, something more than their ingenuity has kept this document alive for two centuries after their deaths.

As I see it, it is not the specification of certain rights, nor the broad sweep of its guarantees, nor even the wisdom of the Founders that explains why our Bill of Rights has endured. It is something even more fundamental.

In my view, the central reason why our Bill of Rights has succeeded, where similar documents have failed in other nations, is that our Bill of Rights enshrines a balance that lies at the very core of our American character: it sides with the protection of personal freedom over the power of government to intrude in our private lives, where the two conflict. The idea that our system should "tilt" toward individual rights, when those freedoms clash with governmental authority, is at the center of the Bill of Rights—and at the center of our hearts as a people.

We see this idea clearly at work in some of the specifics of the Bill of Rights: for example, in the Third Amendment's bar on quartering troops and the Fourth Amendment's ban on unreasonable searches and seizures. But to fully understand the scope of the Bill of Rights' protection of personal freedom, we must look at that document as a whole. We must see the ten amendments as one document—a document that enshrines our right to live our lives as we choose, with no governmental authority, petty or great, empowered to constrain us.

We must also consider what Judge Robert Bork called an "ink blot on the Constitution"—the critical Ninth Amendment, with its "instruction" that the Bill of Rights is not an exclusive catalogue of the liberties that we Americans reserve against intrusion by government.

Consider the most important freedoms we enjoy in this country: the right to choose our own spouse; to live wherever we please; to travel abroad and at home; to select our own careers, our own schooling; to decide whether we will or will not have children. These rights that have often been denied in other nations, and have sometimes been challenged here. These freedoms are not listed in the Bill of Rights, and yet it is impossible to imagine this as a free country, without such freedoms being Constitutionally guaranteed.

Indeed, what makes the Bill of Rights so dear to every person in this nation is their "certain knowledge" that these fundamental freedoms are protected from government interference, even though they are not spelled out in that document's text. These so-called "unenumerated rights" are fundamental to us, precisely because they suggest no limits on liberty. They form the essential character of our American democracy, and insure the continued vitality of our Bill of Rights.

Of course, some legal scholars dispute this view, and say, for example, that protecting unenumerated rights is at odds with the doctrine of "original intent." Nothing could be further from the truth: the notion of inalienable rights, enumerated or not, beyond the reach of government, is the essence of the original intent of our Founders.

When the Framers completed their work in Philadelphia, the document contained no bill of rights, and that omission was a deliberate act of the Convention. That was not because any of the delegates questioned the existence of natural, inalienable rights, but precisely because they presumed those rights to be unquestionable.

Still, the absence of a national bill of rights disturbed many Americans, and satisfying their reservations quickly became the price of ratification. As a result, James Madison, originally an opponent of a bill of rights, found himself on the floor of the House of Representatives during the first Congress, proposing the adoption of just such a document.

For Madison, a problem remained. He feared for the future of those rights not enumerated, since specifying some rights could create the presumption that no other rights existed—precisely the argument that scholars like Robert Bork continue to make today. This was, and is, no small question, and the whole history of our country as well as the character of our society turns upon the way it was resolved.

Madison's answer to this dilemma was considered so vital that it was placed in the Bill of Rights itself—in the Ninth Amendment—which insists that "the enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people." Madison and a majority of the Congress believed those unenumerated rights were so real and their protection so crucial that the Bill of Rights would not have been adopted without this amendment.

Within this story, too, lies the secret of the success of our Bill of Rights. For, in the words of Justice Brandeis, the Constitution reserves to the people, "as against the government, the right to be let alone—the most comprehensive of rights and the right most valued by civilized man." That "right to be let alone" protects individual liberty from threats that are decades old, but still loom on the horizon today.

The unenumerated freedoms enshrined in our Bill of Rights:

Prevent the government from making it a crime to teach foreign languages to children—as the state of Nebraska once did, during an earlier "America First" campaign;

Prevent the government from ordering the compulsory sterilization of petty thieves—as the state of Oklahoma once did, during an earlier phase in the "war on crime;"

And prevent the government from making it illegal for doctors to prescribe birth control for married couples—as did the state of Connecticut, during an earlier debate over the distribution of contraceptives.

Nowhere does the Constitution or the Bill of Rights "enumerate" the individual freedoms protected in these cases, but neither the American people nor the Supreme Court doubts that our Bill of Rights does, indeed, protect those rights and provide for our privacy.

The debate over such "unenumerated rights" formed the crux of my disagreement with Judge Bork, and was the reason I felt compelled to lead the fight in the Senate against this otherwise honorable, brilliant and decent man. Judge Bork believed that the danger to democracy from acknowledging unenumerated rights is greater than the danger to freedom posed by discarding them.

This is a view I vigorously reject. The demonstrated pattern among the Supreme Court's opinions—many written by Justices like Frankfurter, Harlan and Powell, who exemplify the conservative jurisprudential tradition of the 20th Century—finds a common ground upon which to articulate a right to privacy. Such a right must extend to certain carefully defined and narrowly drawn decisions about procreation, family structure and family relationships.

That is a view, I might add, that was shared by then-Judge David Souter in his confirmation hearings, and is the principal reason that—notwithstanding my disagreement with him on some questions of law—I was pleased and proud to support his confirmation to the Court. For Justice Souter recognized, unlike Judge Bork, that throughout our history, the tension between individual liberty and the demands of organized society—between rights and power—has been at the heart of our struggle to define our essence as a nation.

Fortunately, the prevailing tide of our history has run consistently at the flood toward liberty; we have built the essential character of our nation at the high-water marks of freedom. Our Bill of Rights, interpreted with the guidance found in the Ninth Amendment, is our best assurance that the tide of liberty will continue to flow, ever stronger, ever deeper and ever broader.

It is painfully ironic that as we reach this milestone for our Bill of Rights, and as that document is emerging as a model for new democracies around the world, its foundations are under a two-pronged attack—one political, one intellectual—here at home.

First, we, as lawyers, can not ignore the growing fashion of our political system—politicians "bashing" the very institution on which this nation depends to breath life into its rights day by day: the American legal system. Even as people all over the world seek to emulate the success of our legal system—our courts, our independent bars, our robust legal profession—and copy it for their own, many here in this country can see only its failings, and would cast it aside without giving thought to what might be thrown out with it.

Let us remind these political critics of our profession that the Framers considered the right to a lawyer—as well as the right to a jury, even in civil cases—so fundamental that these guarantees are explicitly protected in the text of the Bill of Rights. That is not to say our modern legal system is perfect: it has its faults, as we all know. But the overheated rhetoric we have been hearing from some national leaders goes well beyond reform to demagoguery; it is an attack on the traditional purposes of our legal institutions, and on the profession that keeps these institutions alive and functioning.

It is true that our civil justice system has become too expensive, and as a result, it deprives many Americans of their "day in court" and imposes enormous costs on our society and its businesses. That's why I proposed the Civil Justice Reform Act, signed into law last year and beginning to take effect right now.

Perhaps more reforms are still needed; if that is the case, let it be so. But let us never forget that there are many other nations that have created systems of "justice" that are "cheap" and "efficient"—and those are the very nations where people have risked their lives to discard their governments and replace them with a system of justice like our own. It is our system that is the model; our system, the one that the critics here have been denigrating; our system, that rests, at bottom, on our Bill of Rights.

In addition to these political attacks on our profession and our system, there are growing academic and intellectual attacks on the legal framework that has been built upon our Bill of Rights.

This onslaught comes from many quarters, and has many different objectives: from Judge Bork's call to curtail the protection of unenumerated rights, to the views of Chicago Professor Richard Epstein, who would radically transform the Bill of Rights into a document that primarily protects property rights, and not personal freedoms.

Unfortunately, we lawyers are not very well informed or very much engaged in the debate that is taking place for the heart and intellectual soul of our legal system. For too long, we have ignored the fact that these thinkers—distinguished, articulate men and women, who have their differences—share one common goal: a dramatic change in the way in way in which the Bill of Rights protects our individual liberties.

As we ponder these new ideas, let us never forget what is at stake here: not some academic exercise, nor a quest for debating points—but, in truth, nothing less than the meaning of our freedoms and our rights as Americans. And as this debate rages in our courts and our Congress, we as lawyers can not be casual observers or detached dilettantes. We must be outspoken advocates for the elaborate but delicate framework of rights that has been erected in this country over the past two centuries; that is the living heritage of those ten amendments ratified 200 years ago.

If we live up to our duties as a profession, then in the end, no matter the attacks on our system, it will endure. For this system draws upon the indomitable determination of Americans to be free, a drive that can not be denied.

And our system also rests on a Judeo-Christian tradition that has guided us for more than 5,000 years; a tradition that recognizes the fundamental right of all persons to shape their own destiny.

For the ideal of personal freedom was not, of course, conceived by the Framers of the Bill of Rights. It came to that document from the "self-evident" right, affirmed by the Declaration of Independence, to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." The Declaration in turn drew upon the great English common law; which in turn had been built upon Magna Carta; and so on and on, century before century, back to the dawn of our civilization.

It is a line that reaches all the way back to what is, in my mind, the most eloquent definition of human freedom, found in the Biblical book of Micah. A passage in the fourth chapter of that book still rings true in our ears, 27 centuries after it flowed from the pen of the poet:

> They shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree, and none shall make them afraid.

This promise of our faith, the most basic of human rights—that none shall violate the sanctuary of our own place; that none shall hinder our pursuit of a full, free and creative life; that none shall meddle with our families; that none shall dictate our faith—are the cornerstones of our civilization.

They are the gift of God. They precede the formation of government; and the purpose of our Constitution, above all else, is to secure them. This is the tradition that must continue to guide us as we enter our third century under the Bill of Rights.

We Americans have long demonstrated our ability to adapt to new social, economic and technological realities, without sacrificing the values and liberties our Nation was created to preserve and expand. If we accept uncritically what is being proposed in the way of limitations placed upon our personal freedoms, we will fundamentally change as a country.

Make no mistake about it: there is a serious debate raging within our profession, within the academic community, about changing the emphasis we place upon individual freedom, and about whether or not the Bill of Rights and the Constitution have as their essence the protection of that freedom. Those of us in the legal profession must become more aware of this Constitutional debate—and more involved in it—in order to insure that our children enjoy the same, fundamental, taken-for-granted, Godgiven, individual rights that we enjoy.

If we keep that tradition alive—if we continue to demand, above all else, that our Bill of Rights defend us against government intrusion into our private lives—then I believe, with Micah, that none shall prevail over us, and none shall make us afraid.

DR. ARNOLD E. SCHAEFER: WARRIOR AGAINST HUNGER

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, with the passing of Dr. Arnold Edward Schaefer earlier this week, the United States lost a truly distinguished physician and scientist, a top nutritionist who devoted the prime of his career to spotlighting the existence of hunger and malnutrition not just in the third world, but right here in the world's richest country.

It was Dr. Schaefer who headed up the authoritative National Nutrition Survey in the late 1960's, a 10-State study which produced evidence of a shockingly widespread hunger problem in the United States—especially in the South. It is a great shame that the newly inaugurated Nixon administration curtailed Dr. Schaefer's National Nutrition Survey in early 1969. They attempted to silence the brave messenger because his findings were a political embarrassment. But rather than be silenced, Dr. Schaefer left the Government and publicly aired the results of his study.

For some 20 years, Dr. Schaefer was the chief nutrition expert at the National Institutes of Health. In that capacity, he conducted nutrition surveys in 35 developing nations. In 1980, he moved to Omaha, NE, to become director of the Swanson Center for Nutrition. After retiring, he continued to work as volunteer nutrition consultant at the University of Nebraska, including service as nutrition advisor to the Cornhuskers football team.

I feel not just a personal loss at Dr. Schaefer's death, but a tremendous sense of gratitude for the many, many hours he spent tutoring me on the causes and consequences of hunger. My 1970 book, "The Case Against Hunger," benefited in countless ways from his insights and data. Dr. Schaefer was a remarkable man, and I will miss him greatly.

TRIBUTE TO DON BOLCE

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise today to note with great regret the departure of an individual who has made a great deal of difference in the lives of many low-income children in this country. For the past 2 years, Don Bolce has been Director of Government Affairs for the National Head Start Association [NHSA]. During those years, which saw the passage of landmark Head Start legislation, Don has been an unfailing source of information about every aspect of Head Start. He has also been a wise counselor on policy directions for the program and a tireless advocate for children who begin life at a disadvantage. When you see such dedication to a program, Mr. President, it is not difficult to understand why Head Start is a success.

One reason Don is so effective is his deep understanding of the strengths and needs of Head Start families, an understanding that grew from his experience as a Head Start Director in California. When he joined NHSA, he brought with him knowledge not only of how a Head Start program actually works, but also of the importance of keeping our focus firmly on the children and families whom Head Start serves as we see develop policy.

In 1990, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Children, Family, Drugs, and Alcoholism, which oversees Head Start, I had the pleasure of working with Don on legislation I sponsored to reauthorize the program. In the early stages of the reauthorization process, we had a dream that we hardly dared express—a dream that every eligible child could have the chance to participate in Head Start. Don was an integral part of the effort that led to passage of legislation embodying that dream. The Augustus F. Hawkins Human Services Reauthorization Act, which became law on November 3, 1990, created for the first time a blueprint for every eligible child to participate by 1995.

Looking back on that time, the most remarkable thing to me is that the legislation passed the Senate twice by unanimous consent. That there could be practically no dissent in either body was due in large part to the efforts of Don and others to make Head Start's accomplishments known to the Congress. Don should be particularly proud of his work, because the end result holds the promise of a better life for millions of children—including 11,000 children in my own State of Connecticut who are shut out of Head Start for lack of funds.

Don is leaving NHSA, but not the Head Start community. Returning to California, he will be directing one of the Head Start transition projects created by the 1990 legislation to help Head Start children and their families as they move into elementary school. Don will be sorely missed by many people here in Washington who consider him a valued colleague. But the families and staff in the program he will be heading are very lucky indeed to have someone so caring and conscientious working with them. I wish Don and his family well in their new endeavors, and I sincerely hope that we can continue to work together to make Head Start an even better program.

TAXPAYER BILL OF RIGHTS 2

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise today to express my support of the legislation introduced by the Senator from Arkansas, the taxpayer bill of rights 2 [T2].

Mr. President, in 1988 Congress passed the taxpayer bill of rights. This landmark legislation was a good first step in holding the Internal Revenue Service accountable for its actions toward the taxpayers of this country. Many of the provisions contained in that legislation are making a measurable difference in the relationship between the Service and the taxpayer.

In 1988, however, we only took the first step in protecting the American taxpayer. We still have work to do. The system remains highly burdensome to taxpayers and too often, inequities occur in the tax administration process. I still receive numerous complaints from my constituents in Utah and others about the discourteous and sometimes abusive treatment they are receiving from the IRS.

The Internal Revenue Service affects the lives of more Americans than any other Government agency. We necessarily grant the IRS the power to know a great deal about our personal and business lives. Unfortunately, along with this power comes the opportunity for abuse. I believe that the vast majority of IRS employees are hardworking and dedicated public servants. However, there are occasions when some IRS agents appear to be looking at American taxpayers as their adversary, potential victim, or springboard for advancement within the Service.

Something must be done to ensure that the taxpayers are treated like the human beings with rights and responsibilities that they are.

The taxpayer bill of rights 2 will do just this. Without altering the power of the Service, T2 will curb these abuses by making the IRS more accountable for its actions and strengthening the ability of taxpayers to fight unreasonable actions against them.

By strengthening oversight and resolution practices within the IRS and the ability of the taxpayers to fight abusive and unfair treatment, this legislation will help to restore a sense of balance between the Internal Revenue Service and the taxpayer.

This legislation is not about diminishing the role of the IRS or its ability to collect taxes. It is about ensuring that fairness and respect are returned to the American tax system. T2 will provide innocent taxpayers with the assurance that they will be able to protect themselves from the mistakes or misdeeds of the IRS, thus restoring the sense of balance that needs to exist in a system based on voluntary compliance. This legislation will help bring taxpayer confidence and respect back to the U.S. tax system.

I urge my colleagues to help the taxpayers protect their rights and support this legislation.

RECESS SUBJECT TO THE CALL OF THE CHAIR

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am advised that the majority leader would approve of my making the following request.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess awaiting the call of the Chair.

There being no objection, at 11:54 a.m., the Senate recessed, subject to the call of the Chair.

The Senate reassembled at 1:58 p.m., when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. KOHL].

EXECUTIVE SESSION

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to executive session to consider the following nominations: Calendar No. 500, Andrew H. Card, Jr., to be Secretary of Transportation and all nominations placed on the Secretary's desk in the Coast Guard.

I further ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to immediate consideration and that the nominees be confirmed en bloc; that any statements appear in the RECORD as if read; that the motions to reconsider be laid upon the table en bloc; that the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action; and that the Senate return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The nominations, considered and confirmed, are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION

Andrew H. Card, Jr., of Massachusetts, to be Secretary of Transportation.

NOMINATIONS PLACED ON THE SECRETARY'S DESK IN THE COAST GUARD

Coast Guard nominations beginning James M. Leitner, and ending Raymond W. Blowitski, which nominations were received by the Senate and appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 22, 1992.

Coast Guard nominations beginning Daniel N. Wood, and ending Matthew L. Young, which nominations were received by the Senate and appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 22, 1992.

STATEMENT ON THE NOMINATION OF ANDREW H. CARD, JR., TO BE SECRETARY OF TRANSPORTATION

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today in strong support of the nomination of Andrew H. Card, Jr., to be Secretary of Transportation.

Mr. Card is well-qualified to hold this demanding position. He received his engineering degree from the University of South Carolina where he was the recipient of a U.S. Navy ROTC scholarship. He received a congressional appointment to the U.S. Merchant Marine Academy which he attended for 1 year. Mr. Card also attended the Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University and subsequently as a guest lecturer at that institution.

After completion of his education, Andrew Card worked as a design, then a structural engineer in Massachusetts. He was elected to the Massachusetts House of Representatives in 1975 and he served in that body until 1983. While serving in the House, he was assistant Republican whip from 1977 until 1983.

In 1983, Mr. Card joined President Reagan as a Special Assistant for Intergovernmental Affairs. He remained at the White House until 1987 and returned there following President Bush's election, when he became Deputy to the Chief of Staff and then Deputy Chief of Staff.

Mr. Card has been involved in numerous civic activities, including the American Red Cross, United Cerebral Palsy, Rotary International, the Jaycees, and the Boy Scouts. He also served on the National Advisory Council for the University of South Carolina.

As we approach the 21st century, transportation will continue to be an important issue. I believe that Andrew Card is well equipped to handle the challenging position of Secretary of Transportation. He is committed to safety in all areas of transportation. He believes that the United States must rebuild its infrastructure so that transportation will function efficiently, thus increasing the Nation's competitiveness.

Mr. President, I commend President Bush for nominating Mr. Card. If confirmed by the Senate, as I am sure he will be, I have every confidence Mr. Card will serve honorably and capably as Secretary of Transportation.

STATEMENT OF SENATOR JOHN H. CHAFEE ON THE NOMINATION OF ANDREW H. CARD, JR., TO BE SECRETARY OF TRANSPORTATION

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I strongly support the President's choice of Andrew H. Card for the position of Secretary of Transportation.

As a fellow New Englander, I have known Andrew Card for many years. He comes to this job with excellent qualifications.

Mr. Card will bring to the Department of Transportation an engineering background with hands-on experience designing, building, and inspecting transportation projects. He has been tested as a State official serving effectively as a member of the Massachusetts Legislature. He also has had experience at the local level as a planner for the city of Holbrook, MA. His most recent responsibilities at the White House demonstrate his management skills.

Coming from New England, Mr. Card has first-hand knowledge of the importance of all the modes of transportation, the problems of congestion, and the necessity for improving air quality. Solving these problems will take the cooperation of all levels of government, and Andy's experience at the local, State, and Federal level will be very valuable.

The Committee on Environment and Public Works held an informational hearing with Mr. Card on February 19. I was pleased to hear Mr. Card state his commitment to carrying out the intent of the recently passed Intermodal Surface Transportation Efficiency Act of 1991 [ISTEA].

This law marks the beginning of an exciting and challenging time in the field of transportation, and I believe Mr. Card is up to the challenge. He understands that the ISTEA signals a new era in transportation where highways will no longer solve all transportation problems, and I believe he will get this message out to all the constituencies of transportation.

Andrew Card understands what intermodal means and how important this concept is to the success of transportation. He developed a multi-modal strategy in a white paper he developed as a State legislator and candidate for Governor of the State of Massachusetts more than 10 years ago. It is obvious that he has spent a lot of time thinking about transportation issues, listening to experts, and talking with officials who deliver transportation services.

Mr. President, as I stated at the beginning, the President has made an excellent choice for the position of Secretary of Transportation. Andrew Card will be an outstanding Secretary of Transportation, and I look forward to working with him.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will now return to legislative session.

TITLE I—FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

Subtitle A—Findings and Purposes

SEC. 1101. FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the achievement of energy security for the United States is essential to the health of the national economy and the maintenance of national security;

(2) as an energy-rich country that nonetheless depends on oil imports for an increasing share of oil use, United States energy security requires that the Nation reduce oil consumption, reduce oil imports, maximize domestic oil production, and particularly for transportation purposes, encourage use of energy sources other than oil;

(3) this can be accomplished with no significant adverse effect on the environment, and will stimulate economic growth, improve the competitiveness of United States industry in the global market, and reduce the possibility of global climate change; and

(4) the achievement of energy security for the United States will require that a longterm, comprehensive national energy policy be established and sustained.

SEC. 1102. PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) slow the Nation's increasing dependence on imported oil over the shortterm, and in the longterm significantly reduce that dependence;

(2) reduce the consumption of oil in the transportation sector, and encourage development and use of alternative energy sources, particularly for transportation;

(3) encourage development and deployment of renewable energy sources in the United States and on an international basis in lesser-developed countries;

(4) streamline the hydroelectric licensing process and encourage hydroelectric development at Federal dams;

(5) encourage more efficient use of energy throughout the economy, including improvements in the industrial, commercial and residential sectors, increasing energy efficiency in Federal energy management, and encouraging more efficient energy use by electric utilities;

(7) encourage the production and use of nuclear power by providing for the commercialization of advanced nuclear reactor technologies and improving the nuclear reactor licensing process;

(8) enhance the competitive position of the Federal uranium enrichment enterprise;

(9) encourage increased utilization of natural gas and other domestic energy resources to displace imported oil and meet domestic energy demand in a manner consistent with environmental values;

(10) encourage the development of domestic energy resources on the Outer Continental Shelf;

(11) establish priorities for Federal energy research, development, demonstration, and commercialization;

(12) encourage enhanced oil and gas recovery from known and producing domestic reserves;

(13) enhance the role of coal and clean coal technology in meeting the Nation's energy needs;

(14) foster competition in the electric utility industry;

(15) provide enhanced oil security protection through the Strategic Petroleum Reserve; and

(16) encourage the Federal Government to play a lead role in the widespread commercialization of alternative fuel vehicles.

Subtitle B—Climate Protection Goals, Least-Cost Energy Strategy, and Director of Climate Protection

SEC. 1201. CLIMATE PROTECTION GOALS AND POLICIES.—(a) GOALS.—The goals of this subtitle are to—

(1) investigate the feasibility and economic, energy, social, environmental and competitive implications of the stabilization of the generation of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases in the United States;

(2) assess the feasibility of further limiting, or reducing, the generation of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases not controlled by the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer;

(3) investigate the feasibility and economic, energy, social, and environmental implications of achieving a 20 percent reduction in the generation of carbon dioxide by the year 2005 as recommended by the 1988 Toronto Scientific World Conference on the Changing Atmosphere;

(4) investigate the feasibility and economic, energy, social, and environmental implications of stabilizing carbon dioxide emissions by the year 2005; and

(5) evaluate the potential social, economic, energy, and environmental implications of implementing the policies mentioned in paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (4) in order to enable the United States to comply with any obligations under an international global climate change framework convention or agreement.

(b) POLICIES.—The least-cost energy strategy under section 1202 shall evaluate the economic, energy, social, environmental, technical, and competitive impacts of the implementation of policies to be considered in section 1201(a) that include, but are not limited to, policies that:

(1) implement standards for more efficient use of fossil fuels;

(2) increase the energy efficiency of existing technologies;

(3) encourage technologies, including clean coal technologies, that generate lower levels of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases;

(4) promote the use of renewable energy resources, including solar, geothermal, sustainable biomass, hydropower, and wind power;

(5) affect the development and consumption of energy and energy efficiency resources and electricity through tax policy;

(6) encourage investment in energy efficient equipment and technologies; and

(7) encourage the development of energy technologies, such as advanced nuclear fission and nuclear fusion, that produce energy without carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases as a byproduct, and encourage the deployment of nuclear electric generating capacity.

(c) FRAMEWORK CONVENTION.—In order to promote international cooperation in addressing potential global climate change, it is the goal of the United States to establish by 1992, an international framework convention on global climate change through the activities of the Negotiating Committee for a Framework Convention of the United Nations International Environmental Program and the World Meteorological Organization and to secure the commitment of the community of nations to such convention.

SEC. 1202. LEAST-COST ENERGY STRATEGY.—(a) STRATEGY.—The first National Energy Policy Plan (the "Plan") under section 801 of the Department of Energy Organization Act (42 U.S.C. 7321) prepared and submitted by the President to Congress after the date of the enactment of this Act, and each subsequent such Plan, shall include a least-cost energy strategy prepared by the Secretary.

(b) PRIORITIES.—(1) The least-cost energy strategy shall identify Federal priorities for the encouragement of the use of energy and energy efficiency resources. In developing the least-cost energy strategy, the Secretary shall take into consideration the economic, energy, social, and environmental consequences of his choices. Such strategy shall be designed to achieve to the maximum extent practicable and at least-cost to the Nation—

(A) the energy production, utilization, and conservation objectives of the Plan;

(B) the stabilization and eventual reductions in the generation of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases mentioned in section 1201(a); and

(C) the energy efficiency, renewable energy, and oil reduction goals described in subtitle C.

(2) The least-cost energy strategy shall include—

(A) a comprehensive inventory of available energy and energy efficiency resources and their projected costs, taking into account all costs of production, transportation, and utilization of such resources, including—

(c) SECRETARIAL CONSIDERATION.—(1) In developing the least-cost energy strategy, the Secretary shall give full consideration to:

(A) the relative costs of energy and energy efficiency resources based upon a comparison of the estimated system costs of other similarly reliable and available resources; and

(B) the economic, energy, social and environmental consequences resulting from the establishment of any particular order of Federal priority.

(2) System costs under paragraph (1) are all direct and quantifiable net costs for the resource over its available life, including the cost of production, transportation, utilization, waste management, environmental compliance, and, in the case of imported energy resources, maintaining access to foreign sources of supply.

(3) When comparing an energy efficiency resource to an energy resource, a higher priority shall be assigned to the energy efficiency resource whenever its estimated system cost is equal to the estimated system cost of the energy resource.

SEC. 1203. DIRECTOR OF CLIMATE PROTECTION.—(a) APPOINTMENT.—Within six months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall appoint within the Department, a Director of Climate Protection (the "Director"). The Director shall:

(B) providing an alternative fuel refueling facility for such agency, State, or person's alternative fuel vehicles would be economically impracticable.

(b) DURATION OF EXEMPTIONS.—An exemption granted by the Secretary under subsection (a) shall be for an initial period of no more than 12 months and shall be renewable for additional periods of no more than 12 months.

SEC. 4107. VEHICLE CONVERSIONS.—The requirements of sections 4103 and 4104 may be met through the conversion of existing or new gasoline or diesel-powered vehicles to alternative fuel vehicles. For purposes of such sections, the conversion of a vehicle to an alternative fuel vehicle shall be treated as the purchase of an alternative fuel vehicle. However, if alternative fuel vehicles are not available from original equipment manufacturers, nothing in this section shall be construed to require any Federal agency, State or covered person subject to the fleet vehicle acquisition requirements under this title to convert existing or new gasoline or diesel-powered vehicles to alternative fuels vehicles or to purchase converted vehicles.

SEC. 4108. CREDITS.—(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall allocate a credit to a State or covered person that is subject to the requirements of section 4103 or 4104, respectively, if that State or person purchases an alternative fuel vehicle in excess of the number that State or person is required to purchase under section 4103 or 4104 or purchases an alternative fuel vehicle before the date that State or person is required to purchase an alternative fuel vehicle under such section.

(b) ALLOCATION.—In allocating credits under subsection (a), the Secretary shall allocate one credit for each alternative fuel vehicle the State or covered person purchases that exceeds the number of alternative fuel vehicles that State or person is required to purchase under section 4103 or 4104 or that is purchased before the date that State or person is required to purchase an alternative fuel vehicle under such section. In the event that a vehicle is purchased before the date otherwise required, the Secretary shall allocate one credit per vehicle for each year the vehicle is purchased before the required date. The credit shall be allocated for the same type vehicle as the excess vehicle or earlier purchased vehicle.

(c) USE OF CREDITS.—At the request of a State or covered person allocated a credit under this section, the Secretary shall treat the credit as the purchase of one alternative fuel vehicle of the type for which the credit is allocated in the year designated by that State or person when determining whether that State or person has complied with this subtitle in the year designated. A credit may be counted toward compliance for only one year.

(d) TRANSFERABILITY.—A State or covered person allocated a credit under this section or to whom a credit is transferred under this section, may transfer freely the credit to another State or person who is required to comply with this subtitle. At the request of the State or person to whom a credit is transferred, the Secretary shall treat the transferred credit as the purchase of one alternative fuel vehicle of the type for which the credit is allocated in the year designated by the State or person to whom the credit is transferred when determining whether that State or person has complied with this subtitle in the year designated. A transferred credit may be counted toward compliance for only one year.

"(b) Initial Determinations.—The Secretary shall, within 12 months after the date of enactment of the National Energy Security Act of 1992, determine, with respect to utility distribution transformers; whether—

"(1) it is practicable to classify such products into types and to prescribe test procedures to measure energy use, energy efficiency, or estimated annual operating cost during a representative average use cycle or period of use which are not unduly burdensome to conduct; and

"(2) it is likely that energy efficiency standards would result in significant energy savings, without a reduction in performance, for those products which the Secretary has determined under paragraph (1) that it is practicable to classify and prescribe test procedures.

"(c) Test Procedures.—The Secretary shall, within 18 months after the date of enactment of the National Energy Security Act of 1992, prescribe test procedures for those lamps, motors, small commercial package air conditioning and heating equipment, large commercial package air conditioning and heating equipment, packaged terminal air conditioners, packaged terminal heat pumps, warm air furnaces, packaged boilers, storage water heaters, instantaneous water heaters, and unfired hot water storage tanks for which specific efficiency standards are established by this Act. For small commercial package air conditioning and heating equipment and large commercial package air conditioning and heating equipment, packaged terminal air conditioners, packaged terminal heat pumps, warm-air furnaces, packaged boilers, storage water heaters, instantaneous water heaters, and unfired hot water storage tanks for which the Secretary establishes test procedures pursuant to this section, such test procedures shall be consistent with those generally accepted industry testing procedures or rating procedures, if any, developed by the Air Conditioning and Refrigeration Institute or by the American Society of Heating, Refrigerating and Air Conditioning Engineers as in effect on the date of the enactment of the National Energy Security Act of 1992. If such an industry test procedure or rating procedure for such small commercial package air conditioning and heating equipment or large commercial package air conditioning and heating equipment, packaged terminal air conditioners, packaged terminal heat pumps, warm-air furnaces, packaged boilers, storage water heaters, instantaneous water heaters, and unfired hot water storage tanks is subsequently amended the Secretary shall amend the test procedure for the product as necessary to be consistent with the amended industry test procedure or rating procedure unless he determines by rule published in the Federal Register, supported by clear and convincing evidence, that to do so would not meet the purposes and criteria of this section with respect to the product. If the Secretary issues a rule containing such a determination the rule may establish an amended test procedure for such product that meets the purposes and criteria of this section with respect to that product.

"(d) CLASSIFICATION AND STANDARDS.—(1) The Secretary, for those products for which test procedures have been prescribed under subsection (c), shall, within eighteen months thereafter:

"(A) determine types (or classes) for utility distribution transformers; and

"(B) develop energy conservation standards for each type (or class) of utility distribution transformers for which such standards would be technologically feasible and economically justified. Such standards shall become effective no less than eighteen months and no more than three years after development of such standards.

"(2) In establishing standards for utility distribution transformers, the Secretary shall use the criteria contained in sections 325 (l) and (m) of this Act.

"(3)(A) In establishing standards for utility distribution transformers, the Secretary shall first review existing and generally accepted industry voluntary energy efficiency standards for these products, if any, to determine whether the adoption of industry standards would be consistent with the objective of increasing energy efficiency to the extent technically feasible and economically justified. In which case, the Secretary shall adopt such industry standards.

"(B) For small package air conditioning and heating equipment, the Secretary shall establish such standards at the standard levels set forth for such products in ASHRAE/IES Standard 90.1 as in effect on the date of enactment of this Act. Such standards shall become effective for such products manufactured on or after January 1, 1994. Such standards levels shall be as follows:

"(G) If ASHRAE/IES Standard 90.1 as in effect on the date of enactment of the National Energy Security Act of 1992 is subsequently amended with respect to any type or class of small commercial package air conditioning and heating equipment, large commercial package air conditioning and heating equipment, packaged terminal air conditioner, packaged terminal heat pump, warm-air furnace, packaged boiler, storage water heater, instantaneous water heater, or unfired hot water storage tank, then the Secretary shall establish an amended uniform national standard for that product type or class at the minimum level for each effective date specified in the amended ASHRAE/IES Standard 90.1 unless he determines by rule published in the Federal Register, supported by clear and convincing evidence, that adoption of a standard more stringent than the amended ASHRAE/IES Standard 90.1 for such product type of class would result in significant additional conservation of energy and is technologically feasible and economically justified. If the Secretary issues a rule containing such a determination, the rule shall establish an amended uniform national standard for such product type or class if establishment of such standard will result in significant additional conservation of energy and if the establishment of such standard is technologically feasible and economically justified. In determining whether a standard is economically justified, the Secretary shall, after receiving views and comments furnished with respect to the proposed standard, determine whether the benefits of the standard exceed its burdens by, to the greatest extent practicable, considering—

"(i) the economic impact of the standard on the manufacturers and on the consumers of the products subject to such standard;

"(ii) the savings in operating costs throughout the estimated average life of the product in the type (or class) compared to any increase in the price of, or in the initial charges for, or maintenance expenses of, the products which are likely to result from the imposition of the standard;

"(iii) the total projected amount of energy savings likely to result directly from the imposition of the standard;

"(iv) any lessening of the utility or the performance of the products likely to result from the imposition of the standard;

"(v) the impact of any lessening of competition, as determined in writing by the Attorney General, that is likely to result from the imposition of the standard;

"(vi) the need for national energy conservation; and

"(vii) other factors the Secretary considers relevant.

The Secretary may not prescribe any amended standard which increases the maximum allowable energy use, or decreases the minimum required energy efficiency, of a covered product. The Secretary may not prescribe an amended standard under this subparagraph (d)(3)(G) if the Secretary finds (and publishes such finding) that interested persons have established by a preponderance of the evidence that the standard is likely to result in the unavailability in the United States in any product type (or class) of performance characteristics (including reliability), features, sizes, capacities, and volumes that are substantially the same as those generally available in the United States at the time of the Secretary's finding. The failure of some types (or classes) to meet this criterion shall not affect the Secretary's determination of whether to prescribe a standard for other types (or classes). A standard as amended by the Secretary under this subsection shall become effective for products manufactured on or after a date which is—

"(I) two years after the effective date of the relevant standard in amended ASHRAE/IES Standard 90.1 for small commercial package air conditioning and heating equipment, packaged terminal air conditioners, packaged terminal heat pumps, warm-air furnaces, packaged boilers, storage water heaters, instantaneous water heaters, and unfired hot water storage tanks, and

"(II) three years after the effective date of the relevant standard in amended ASHRAE/IES Standard 90.1 for large commercial package air conditioning and heating equipment, except that an amended standard issued by the Secretary pursuant to a rule under this subparagraph (d)(3)(G) shall become effective for products manufactured on or after a date which is four years after the date the rule is published in the Federal Register.

"(H) The criteria specified in subparagraph (d)(3)(G) shall apply only to products listed in subparagraph (d)(3)(G).

"(4)(A) Standards prescribed or established under this subsection (d) shall, upon their effective date, preempt any State or local regulation concerning the energy efficiency or energy use of such products.

"(B) Notwithstanding subparagraph (a), a standard prescribed or established under this subsection (d) shall not preempt a standard for such a product in a building code for new construction if the standard in the building code does not require that the energy efficiency of such product exceed the applicable minimum energy efficiency requirement in amended ASHRAE/IES Standard 90.1: Provided, That such standard in the building code does not take effect prior to the effective date of amended ASHRAE/IES Standard 90.1.

"(C) Notwithstanding subparagraph (a), a standard prescribed or established under this subsection (d) shall not preempt the standards of the State of California for water-source heat pumps below 135,000 Btu per hour (cooling capacity) that become effective on January 1, 1993, which standards are set forth in table C-6 of the California Code of Regulations, title 24, part 2, chapter 2-53.

"(D) Notwithstanding subparagraph (a), a standard prescribed or established under this subsection (d) shall not preempt a State regulation which has been granted a waiver by the Secretary. The Secretary may grant a waiver pursuant to the terms, conditions, criteria, procedures and other requirements specified in section 327(d) of this Act.

"(5) Except as provided in subparagraphs (d)(3) (B) through (G), the Secretary shall periodically, but at least every five years, review and update any standards established pursuant to this section, and shall reevaluate whether standards are justified for those products for which standards were not adopted.

"(e) LABELING.—(1) The Federal Trade Commission shall, within twelve months after the date on which a test procedure is prescribed by the Secretary for a product (or class thereof) under subsection (c), prescribe a labeling rule for the product (or class thereof), except to the extent that, with respect to a product (or class thereof) the Commission determines that a labeling rule is not economically or technically feasible, would not result in significant energy savings and is not necessary for informational purposes.

"(2) If the Commission determines that labeling is not necessary under paragraph (1) and the Secretary prescribes standards under subsection (d), then the Commission, within twelve months after the date on which a standard is prescribed by the Secretary, shall prescribe a labeling rule designed solely to facilitate enforcement of the requirements of this section and other applicable provisions of law. A labeling rule for small commercial package air conditioning and heating equipment and large commercial package air conditioning and heating equipment shall be designed solely to facilitate enforcement of the regulations of this section and other applicable provisions of law.

"(3) In the case of products for which the Commission prescribes a labeling rule under paragraph (1) manufacturers and importers of such equipment shall establish efficiency ratings for each type of equipment in accordance with the applicable test procedures, and—

"(A) include the efficiency rating of the equipment on or near the permanent nameplate attached to each piece of equipment;

"(B) prominently display the efficiency rating of the equipment in new equipment catalogs used by the manufacturer or importer to advertise the equipment; and

"(C) such other markings as the Secretary may determine are needed solely to facilitate enforcement of the efficiency standards established under this Act.

In developing these labeling requirements for electric motors, the Commission shall take into consideration NEMA Standards Publication MG1-1987.

"(4) Effective 360 days after a test procedure rule applicable to any product is established under this subsection, no manufacturer, distributor, retailer, or private labeler may make any representation—

"(A) in writing (including any representation on a label), or

"(B) in any broadcast advertisement, respecting the energy consumption of such equipment or cost of energy consumed by such equipment, unless such equipment has been tested in accordance with such test procedure and such representation fairly disclosed the results of such testing.

"(f) Requirement of Manufacturers.—For the purpose of requirements of this Act, manufacturers and private labelers are subject to the requirements of section 326 of this Act.

"(g) Enforcement.—After the date on which a manufacturer must provide a label for a product pursuant to subsection (e)—

"(1) each product shall be considered, for purposes of paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 332(a) of this Act a new covered product to which a rule under section 324 of this Act applies; and

"(2) it shall be unlawful for any manufacturer or private labeler to distribute in commerce any new product manufactured after this date which is not in conformity with the applicable energy conservation standard prescribed for the product (or class thereof) under subsection (d). For purposes of section 333 of this Act, this paragraph shall be considered to be a part of section 332 of this Act.

"(h)(1) Effective on the effective date of this Act, this section preempts any State regulation insofar as such State regulation provides at any time for the disclosure of information with respect to any measure of energy consumption of any covered product if—

"(A) such State regulation requires testing or the use of any measure of energy consumption or energy descriptor in any manner other than that provided under this section; or

"(B) such State regulation requires disclosure of information with respect to the energy use or energy efficiency of any product subject to this section other than information required under this section.

"(2) For purposes of this section, the term 'State regulation' means a law, regulation, or other requirement of a State or its political subdivisions.

"(i) Energy Efficiency Labeling for Commercial Office Equipment.—(1) Development of Program.—Not later than one year after the date of enactment of the National Energy Security Act of 1992, and after consulting with appropriate industry representatives, the Secretary shall provide financial and technical assistance to support the voluntary development of a national energy efficiency rating and labeling program including any necessary test procedures for commercial office equipment that is widely used and for which there is a potential for significant energy savings. The program shall set forth information and specifications that will enable purchasers of office equipment to make informed decisions about the energy efficiency and costs of alternative commercial office equipment.

"(2) Secretarial Action.—If a national energy efficiency rating and labeling program consistent with the objectives of paragraph (1) is not voluntarily established within two years of the date of enactment of this Act, then the Secretary shall, after consulting with the National Institute of Standards and Technology, prescribe, within one year, test procedures for such commercial office equipment under section 323 of this Act.

"(3) Federal Trade Commission Rules.—The Federal Trade Commission (hereinafter in this section, the 'Commission') shall prescribe labeling rules under section 324 of this Act for commercial office equipment, except to the extent that the Commission determines that labeling in accordance with subsection (b) of this section is not technologically or economically feasible or is not likely to assist consumers in making purchasing decisions with respect to commercial office equipment (or class thereof).

"(4) Covered Products.—For purposes of sections 323 and 324 of this Act, commercial office equipment shall be considered covered products under section 322 of this Act unless excluded by the Commission pursuant to subsection (c).

"(5) Authorization.—There is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary such sums as are necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.

"(j) Study of Utility Distribution Transformers.—

"(2)(A) Contracts under this title shall be energy savings performance contracts and shall require an annual energy audit and specify the terms and conditions of any government payments and performance guarantees. Such performance guarantee shall provide that the contractor is responsible for maintenance and repair services for any energy related equipment, including computer software systems.

"(B) Aggregate annual payments by the government may not exceed the guaranteed energy savings during each contract year.

"(C) Federal agencies may incur obligations to finance a project provided guaranteed savings exceed the debt service requirements.

"(b) IMPLEMENTATION.—(1)(A) The Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of Defense, the Administrator of the General Services Administration, and the Administrator of NASA, within 90 days after the date of the enactment of the National Energy Security Act of 1992, shall develop appropriate procedures and methods for use by Federal agencies to select energy savings service contractors that will achieve the intent of this section in a cost-effective manner. The procedures and methods used for the calculation of energy savings shall be based on sound engineering practices, consideration of relevant variables such as application utility rate schedules, and fuel and utility billing cycles.

"(B) Notwithstanding any other procurement laws and regulations, such procedures and methods shall apply to the selection by each Federal agency of a contractor to provide energy savings services.

"(C) The process developed pursuant to this section may constitute adequate price competition, no cost justification shall be required, and waiver of the cost pricing and cost accounting standards shall be permitted.

"(2) In carrying out paragraph (1), the Secretary may:

"(A) request statements of qualifications, including financial and performance information, from firms engaged in providing energy saving services;

"(B) designate from the statements received, with an update at least annually, those firms that are qualified to provide energy savings services;

"(C) select at least three firms from the list of qualified contractors to conduct discussions concerning a particular proposed energy savings project, including requesting a technical and price proposal from such selected firms for such project; and

"(D) select from such firms the most qualified firm to provide energy savings services pursuant to such energy savings contractual arrangement that the Secretary determines is fair and reasonable, taking into account—

"(i) the qualifications, prior experience and capabilities of a contractor to perform the proposed type of energy savings services; and

"(ii) the estimated value of the energy savings services to be rendered and the scope and nature of the project.

"(3) In carrying out paragraph (1), the Secretary also may provide for direct negotiations by Federal agencies for energy savings services with contractors that have been selected competitively and approved by any gas or electric utility serving the agency involved.

"(c) DEFINITION.—For the purpose of this title, the terms 'energy savings contract' or 'energy savings performance contract' means a contract which provides for the performance of services for the design, acquisition, installation, testing, operation and, where appropriate, maintenance and repair, of an identified energy savings measure. Such contracts may provide for appropriate software licensing agreements.

"(d) SUNSET AND REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—

"(A) The authority to enter into new contracts under this provision shall cease to be effective three years from the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 6301. ENCOURAGEMENT OF INVESTMENTS IN CONSERVATION AND ENERGY EFFICIENCY RESOURCES AND STUDY OF CERTAIN STATE RATEMAKING POLICIES.—(a) AMENDMENT TO THE PUBLIC UTILITY REGULATORY POLICIES ACT.—The Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (Public Law 95-617), as amended, is further amended by inserting the following new paragraph at the end of section 111:

"(7) ENCOURAGEMENT OF INVESTMENTS IN CONSERVATION AND ENERGY EFFICIENCY RESOURCES.—

"(A) The rates allowed to be charged by a State regulated electric utility shall be such that the utility's investment in and expenditures for energy conservation, energy efficiency resources and other demand side management measures are at least as profitable, taking into account income lost from reduced sales due to investments in and expenditures for conservation and efficiency, as its investments in and expenditures for the construction of new generating equipment: Provided, That such energy conservation, energy efficiency resources and other demand side management measures are appropriately monitored and evaluated.

"(B)(i) The rates allowed to be charged by a State-regulated electric utility shall be such that the utility is encouraged to make investments and expenditures for all cost-effective improvements in the energy efficiency of power generation, transmission and distribution.

"(ii) For purposes of meeting the standard provided in clause (i) of this subparagraph, each State regulatory authority shall consider the disincentives caused by existing ratemaking policies, as well as incentives that would encourage better maintenance, and investment in more efficient power generation, transmission and distribution technologies.

"(C)(i) Each State regulatory authority shall require each electric utility for which it has ratemaking authority to employ a planning and selection process for new energy resources that evaluates the full range of alternatives, including new power supplies, energy conservation and efficiency, cogeneration and district heating and cooling applications, and renewable energy resources, in order to provide adequate and reliable service to its electric customers at the lowest system cost. The process shall take into account necessary features for system operation, such as diversity, reliability, dispatchability, and other factors of risk; shall take into account the ability to verify energy savings achieved through energy conservation and efficiency and the projected durability of such savings measured over time; and shall treat demand and supply resources on a consistent and integrated basis.

"(ii) All plans or filings before a State regulatory authority to meet the requirements of clause (i) of this subparagraph must be updated on a regular basis, must provide the opportunity for public participation and comment, and contain a requirement that the plan be implemented.

"(iii) For purposes of clause (i) of this subparagraph, the term "system cost" shall mean all direct and quantifiable net costs for an energy resource over its available life, including the cost of production, transportation, utilization, waste management, environmental compliance, and, in the case of imported energy resources, maintaining access to foreign sources of supply.

"(D) For purposes of implementing the provisions of this paragraph, any reference contained in this title to the date of enactment of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 shall be deemed to be a reference to the date of enactment of the National Energy Security Act of 1992.".

(b) The Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 is further amended by inserting the following new paragraph at the end of subsection 111(c):

"(3) If a State regulatory authority implements a standard established by subsection (d)(7), such authority shall (A) consider the impact that implementation of such standard would have on small businesses engaged in the design, sale, supply, installation or servicing of energy conservation, energy efficiency or other demand side management measures, and (B) implement such standard so as to assure that utility actions would not provide such utilities with unfair competitive advantages over such small businesses.".

(c) REPORT.—Not later than two years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit a report to the President and to the Congress containing—

(1) a survey of all State laws, regulations, practices, and policies under which State regulatory authorities require or permit rates charged by an electric utility to reflect least-cost planning;

(2) an evaluation by the Secretary of whether, and to what extent, least-cost planning is likely to result in—

(A) higher or lower electricity costs to an electric utility's ultimate consumers or to classes or groups of such consumers;

(B) enhanced or reduced reliability of electric service; and

(C) increased or decreased dependence on particular energy resources; and

(3) an evaluation by the Secretary of whether, and to what extent, ratemaking methodologies implementing least-cost planning adequately take into account the impact of such measures on electric utilities' costs, operations, and rate of return on investment.

(4) an analysis by the Federal Trade Commission of the competitive impact of implementation of energy conservation, energy efficiency and other demand side management programs by utilities on small businesses engaged in the design, sale, supply, installation or servicing of similar energy conservation, energy efficiency or other demand side management measures and whether any unfair, deceptive or predatory acts or practices exist, or are likely to exist, from implementation of such programs.

(d) DEFINITION.—For purposes of subsection (b), the term "least-cost planning" means any standard, regulation, practice, or policy by which a State regulatory authority considers, or requires a State regulated electric utility to consider or implement, a plan for action (including, but not limited to, the construction of or purchase of electric energy from new generation facilities and investment in or expenditures for conservation, energy efficiency resources, or other demand-side management measures) to be taken by a State regulated electric utility for purposes of providing adequate and reliable service to its electric customers with the incurrence of lowest costs by such utility and its customers.

"a. The enrichment of uranium is essential to the national security and energy security of the United States.

"b. A competitive, well-managed and efficient enrichment enterprise provides important economic benefits to the United States and contributes to a highly favorable foreign trade balance.

"c. A strong United States enrichment enterprise promotes United States nonproliferation policies by requiring accountability for United States enriched uranium.

"d. The operation of uranium enrichment facilities must meet high standards for environmental health and safety.

"e. The operation and management of a uranium enrichment enterprise requires a commercial business orientation in order to engender customer support and confidence, and customers, rather than the taxpayers at large, should bear the costs of commercial uranium enrichment services.

"f. The optimal level of expenditures for the uranium enrichment enterprise fluctuates and cannot be accurately predicted or efficiently financed if subject to annual authorization and appropriation.

"g. Flexibility is essential to adapt business operations to a competitive marketplace.

"h. The events of the recent past, including the emergence of foreign competition, have brought new and unforeseen forces to bear upon the management and operation of the Government's uranium enrichment enterprise.

"i. The present operation of the uranium enrichment enterprise must be changed so as to further the national interest in the enterprise and respond to the competitive demand placed upon it by market forces, while continuing to meet the paramount objective of ensuring the Nation's common defense and security.

The Administrator shall define the duties of all officers and employees and provide a system of organization inclusive of a personnel management system to fix responsibilities and promote efficiency. The Corporation shall assure that the personnel function and organization is consistent with the principles of section 2301(b) of title 5, United States Code, relating to merit system principles. Officers and employees of the Corporation shall be appointed, promoted and assigned on the basis of merit and fitness, and other personnel actions shall be consistent with the principles of fairness and due process but without regard to those provisions of title 5 of the United States Code governing appointments and other personnel actions in the competitive service.

"c. Any Federal employee hired before January 1, 1984, who transfers to the Corporation and who on the day before the date of transfer is subject to the Federal Civil Service Retirement System (5 U.S.C. chapter 83, subchapter III) shall remain within the coverage of such system unless he or she elects to be subject to the Federal Employees' Retirement System. For those employees remaining in the Federal Civil Service Retirement System, the Corporation shall withhold pay and shall pay into the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund the amounts specified in chapter 83 of title 5, United States Code. Employment by the Corporation without a break in continuity of service shall be considered to be employment by the United States Government for purposes of subchapter III of chapter 83 of title 5, United States Code. Any employee of the Corporation who is not within the coverage of the Federal Civil Service Retirement System shall be subject to the Federal Employees' Retirement System (5 U.S.C. chapter 84). The Corporation shall withhold pay and make such payments as are required under that retirement system. Further:

"(1) Any employee who transfers to the Corporation under this section shall not be entitled to lump sum payments for unused annual leave under section 5551 of title 5, United States Code, but shall be credited by the Corporation with the unused annual leave at the time of transfer.

"(2) An employee who does not transfer to the Corporation and who does not otherwise remain a Federal employee shall be entitled to all the rights and benefits available under Federal law for separated employees, except that severance pay shall not be payable to an employee who does not accept an offer of employment from the Corporation of work substantially similar to that performed by the employee for the Department.

Compensation, benefits, and other terms and conditions of employment in effect immediately prior to the effective date of this section, whether provided by statute or by rules and regulations of the Department or the executive branch of the Government of the United States shall continue to apply to officers and employees who transfer to the Corporation from other Federal employment until changed by the Corporation in accordance with the provisions of this title.

"g. The provisions of sections 3323(a) and 8344 of title 5, United States Code, or any other law prohibiting or limiting the reemployment of retired officers or employees or the simultaneous receipt of compensation and retired pay or annuities, shall not apply to officers and employees of the Corporation who have retired from or ceased previous government service prior to April 28, 1987.

"SEC. 1505. TRANSFER OF PROPERTY TO THE CORPORATION.—

"a. The Secretary, as requested by the Administrator, is authorized and directed to transfer without charge to the Corporation all of the Department's right, title, or interest in and to, real or personal properties owned by the Department, or by the United States but under control or custody of the Department, which are related to and materially useful in the performance of the functions transferred by this title, including but not limited to the following—

"(1) production facilities for uranium enrichment inclusive of real estate, buildings and other improvements at production sites and their related and supporting equipment: Provided, That facilities, real estate, improvements and equipment related to the Oak Ridge Gaseous Diffusion plant in Oak Ridge, Tennessee, and to the gas centrifuge enrichment program shall not transfer under this paragraph except for diffusion cascades and related equipment needed by the Corporation for replacement parts: Provided further, That any enrichment facilities retained by the Department shall not be used to enrich uranium in competition with the Corporation. This paragraph shall not prejudice consideration of any site as a candidate site for future expansion or replacement of uranium enrichment capacity;

"(2) at such time subsequent to the year 2000 as the Secretary determines that the Oak Ridge Gaseous Diffusion Plant should be decommissioned or decontaminated, or both, the Secretary shall convey without charge equipment and facilities relating to the Oak Ridge Gaseous Diffusion Plant not transferred in paragraph (1) to the Corporation;

"(3) facilities, equipment, and materials for research and development activities related to the isotopic separation of uranium by the gaseous diffusion technology;

"(4) the Department's stocks of preproduced enriched uranium, but excluding stocks of highly enriched uranium: Provided, That approximately two metric tons of the Department's highly enriched uranium shall be loaned to the Corporation as required for working inventory;

"(5) the Department's stocks of feed materials for uranium enrichment except for the quantities allocated to the national defense activities of the Department as of the date of enactment;

"(A) the Department's stockpile of enrichment tails existing as of the date of enactment, shall remain with the Department; and

"(B) stocks of feed materials which remain the property of the Department under paragraph (5) shall remain in place at the enrichment plant sites. The Corporation shall have access to and use of these feed materials provided such quantities as are used are replaced, or credit given, if use by the Department is subsequently needed.

"(6) all other facilities, equipment, materials, processes, patents, technical information of any kind, contracts, agreements, and leases to the extent these items concern the Corporation's functions and activities, except those items required for programs and activities of the Department and those items specifically excluded by this subsection.

The transfer authorized by this section is not subject to the requirements of section 120(h) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act.

"b. The Secretary is authorized and directed to grant to the Corporation without charge the Department's rights and access to the Atomic Vapor Laser Isotope Separation, hereinafter referred to as "AVLIS", technology and to provide on a reimbursable basis and at the request of the Corporation, the necessary cooperation and support of the Department to assure the commercial development and deployment of AVLIS or other technologies in a manner consistent with the intent of this title.

"c. The Secretary is authorized and directed to grant the Corporation without charge, to the extent necessary or appropriate for the conduct of the Corporation's activities, licenses to practice or have practiced any inventions or discoveries (whether patented or unpatented) together with the right to use or have used any processes and technical information owned or controlled by the Department.

"d. The Secretary is directed, without need of further appropriation, to transfer to the Corporation the unexpended balance of appropriations and other monies available to the Department (inclusive of funds set aside for accounts payable), and accounts receivable which are related to functions and activities acquired by the Corporation from the Department pursuant to this title, including all advance payments.

"e. The President is authorized to provide for the transfer to the Corporation of the use, possession, and control of such other real and personal property of the United States which is reasonably related to the functions performed by the Corporation. Such transfers may be made by the President without charge as he may from time to time deem necessary and proper for achieving the purposes of this title.

"f. Title to depleted uranium resulting from the enrichment services provided to the Department by the Corporation shall remain with the Department.

"SEC. 1506. CAPITAL STRUCTURE OF THE CORPORATION.—

"a. Upon commencement of operations of the Corporation, all liabilities then chargeable to unexpended balances of appropriations transferred under section 1505 shall become liabilities of the Corporation.

"b. (1) The Corporation shall issue capital stock representing an equity investment equal to the book value of assets transferred to the Corporation, as reported in the Uranium Enrichment Annual Report for fiscal year 1987, modified to reflect continued depreciation and other usual changes that occur up to the date of transfer. The Secretary of the Treasury shall hold such stock for the United States: Provided, That all rights and duties pertaining to management of the Corporation shall remain vested in the Administrator as specified in section 1501.

"(2) The capital stock of the Corporation shall not be sold, transferred, or conveyed by the United States unless such disposition is specifically authorized by Federal law enacted after enactment of this title.

"c. The Corporation shall pay into miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury of the United States or such other fund as provided by law, dividends on the capital stock, out of earnings of the Corporation, as a return on the investment represented by such stock. The Corporation shall pay such dividends out of earnings, unless there is an overriding need to retain these funds in furtherance of other corporate functions including but not limited to research and development, capital investments and establishment of cash reserves.

"d. The Corporation shall repay within a twenty-year period the amount of $364,000,000 into miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury of the United States, or such other fund as provided by law with interest on the unpaid balance from the date of enactment of this title at a rate equal to the average yield on twenty-year Government obligations as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury on the date of enactment of this title. The money required to be repaid under this subsection is hereinafter referred to as the 'Initial Debt'.

"e. Receipt by the United States of the stock issued by the Corporation (including all rights appurtenant thereto) together with repayment of the Initial Debt shall constitute the sole recovery by the United States of previously unrecovered costs that have been incurred by the United States for uranium enrichment activities prior to enactment of this title.

"SEC. 1507. BORROWING.—

"a. (1) The Corporation is authorized to issue and sell bonds, notes, and other evidences of indebtedness (hereinafter collectively referred to as "bonds") in an amount not exceeding $2,500,000,000 outstanding at any one time to assist in financing its activities and to refund such bonds. The principal of and interest on said bonds shall be payable from revenues of the Corporation.

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Corporation may pledge and use its revenues for payment of the principal of and interest on said bonds, for purchase or redemption thereof, and for other purposes incidental thereto, including creation of reserve funds and other funds which may be similarly pledged and used, to such extent and in such manner as it may deem necessary or desirable.

"(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Corporation is authorized to enter into binding covenants with the holders of said bonds—and with the trustee, if any—under any indenture, resolution, or other agreement entered into in connection with the issuance thereof with respect to the establishment of reserve funds and other funds, stipulations concerning the subsequent issuance of bonds, and such other matters, not inconsistent with this title, as the Corporation may deem necessary or desirable to enhance the marketability of said bonds.

"(4) Bonds issued by the Corporation hereunder shall not be obligations of, nor shall payments of the principal thereof or interest thereon be guaranteed by, the United States.

"b. Bonds issued by the Corporation under this section shall be negotiable instruments unless otherwise specified therein, shall be in such forms and denominations, shall be sold at such times and in such amounts, shall mature at such time or times not more than thirty years from their respective dates, shall be sold at such prices, shall bear such rates of interest, may be redeemable before maturity at the option of the Corporation in such manner and at such times and redemption premiums, may be entitled to such priorities of claim on the Corporation's revenues with respect to principal and interest payments, and shall be subject to such other terms and conditions, as the Corporation may determine: Provided, That at least fifteen days before selling each issue of bonds hereunder (exclusive of any commitment shorter than one year) the Corporation shall advise the Secretary of the Treasury as to the amount, proposed date of sale, maturities, terms and conditions and expected rates of interest of the proposed issue in the fullest detail possible. The Corporation shall not be subject to the provisions of section 9108 of title 31, United States Code. The Corporation shall be deemed part of an executive department or an independent establishment of the United States for purposes of the provisions of section 78c(c) of title 15, United States Code.

"c. Bonds issued by the Corporation hereunder shall be lawful investments and may be accepted as security for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds, the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of any officer or agency of the United States. The Secretary of the Treasury or any other officer or agency having authority over or control of any such fiduciary, trust, or public funds, may at any time sell any of the bonds of the Corporation acquired by them under this section: Provided, That the Corporation shall not issue or sell any bonds to the Federal Financing Bank.

"SEC. 1508. PRICING.—

"a. For purposes of maximizing the long-term economic value of the Corporation to the United States Government, the Corporation shall establish prices for its products, materials and services provided to customers other than the Department on a basis that will, over the long term, allow it to recover its costs for providing the products, materials and services; repay the Initial Debt; recover costs of decontamination, decommissioning and remedial action; and attain the normal business objectives of a profitmaking Corporation.

"b. The Corporation shall establish prices for low assay enrichment services and other products, materials, and services provided the Department on a basis that will allow it to recover its costs on a yearly basis for providing such low assay enrichment services, products, materials and services, including depreciation and the cost of decontamination, decommissioning and remedial action, but excluding repayment of the Initial Debt and profit. In establishing such prices, the base charge paid by the Department in any given year shall not exceed the average base charge paid by customers other than the Department: Provided, however, That if the imposition of such average base charges as a limitation on the base charge paid by the Department in a given year does not permit the Corporation to fully recover its costs for providing such products, materials and services to the Department then, in subsequent years, the Corporation shall include such unrecovered costs in its prices charged the Department. Base charge shall mean the amount paid by a customer per separative work unit for low assay enrichment services during a given year (exclusive of any credits received under a voluntary overfeeding program), less the portion of such amount which represents the cost of decontamination and decommissioning and remedial action. The average base charge paid by customers other than the Department shall be determined by dividing the estimated total dollar amount of low assay enrichment services sales to customers other than the Department during a given year by the estimated amount of separative work units sold to customers other than the Department during that year. Adjustments between estimated and actual amounts shall be made upon receipt of actual sales data.

"c. The Corporation shall establish prices to the Department for high assay enrichment services on a basis that will allow it to recover its costs, on a yearly basis, for providing the products, materials or services, including depreciation and the costs of decontamination, decommissioning, and remedial action concerning enrichment property, but excluding repayment of the Initial Debt and profit. If the Department does not request any enrichment services in a given year, the Department shall reimburse the Corporation for costs required to maintain the minimum level of operation of the high assay production facility.

"d. (1) In accordance with the cost responsibilities defined in paragraphs (3) and (4), the Corporation shall recover from its customers in the prices and charges established in accordance with subsection a., amounts that will be sufficient to pay for the costs of decommissioning, decontamination and remedial action for the various property of the Corporation, including property transferred under section 1505 a. at any time. Such costs shall be based on the point in time that such decommissioning, decontamination and remedial action are to be undertaken and accomplished: Provided, That by the year 2000 the Corporation shall have recovered and deposited in the Uranium Enrichment Decontamination and Decommissioning Fund 50 per centum of the estimated total costs of decontamination and decommissioning of all property transferred or to be transferred to the Corporation under section 1505, including the Oak Ridge Gaseous Diffusion Plant.

"(2) In order to meet the objective defined in paragraph (1), the Corporation shall periodically estimate the anticipated or actual costs of decommissioning and decontamination. Such estimates shall reflect any changes in assumptions or expectations relevant to meeting such objective, including, but not limited to, any changes in applicable environmental requirements. Such estimates shall be reviewed at least every two years.

"(3) For purposes of enabling the Corporation to meet the objective defined in paragraph (1) with respect to the Oak Ridge Gaseous Diffusion Plant, the Secretary shall periodically estimate the anticipated costs of decontamination and decommissioning and the time at which such decontamination and decommissioning is to be accomplished. Such estimates shall reflect any changes in assumptions or expectations relevant to meeting such objective, including but not limited to, any changes in applicable environmental requirements. The Secretary shall review such estimates every two years and convey this information to the Corporation.

"(4) With respect to property that has been used in the production of low-assay separative work,

"(A) The costs of decommissioning, decontamination and remedial action that shall be recoverable from customers other than the Department in prices and charges shall be in the same ratio to the total costs of decommissioning, decontamination and remedial action for the property in question as the production of separative work over the life of such property for commercial customers bears to the total production of separative work over the life of such property.

"(B) All other costs of decommissioning, decontamination and remedial action for such property shall be recovered in prices and charges to the Department.

"(5) With respect to property that has been used solely in the production of high-assay separative work, all costs of decommissioning, decontamination and remedial action shall be recovered in prices and charges to the Department.

"SEC. 1509. AUDITS.—In fiscal years during which an audit is not performed by the Comptroller General in accordance with the provisions of section 9105 of title 31, United States Code, the financial transactions of the Corporation shall be audited by an independent firm or firms of nationally recognized certified public accountants who shall prepare such audits using standards appropriate for commercial corporate transactions. The fiscal year of the Corporation shall conform to the fiscal year of the United States. The General Accounting Office shall review such audits annually, and to the extent necessary, cause there to be a further examination of the Corporation using standards for commercial corporate transactions. Such audits shall be conducted at the place or places where the accounts of the Corporation are established and maintained. All books, financial records, reports, files, papers, memoranda, and other property of, or in use by, the Corporation shall be made available to the person or persons authorized to conduct audits in accordance with the provisions of this section.

"SEC. 1510. REPORTS.—

"a. The Corporation shall prepare an annual report of its activities. This report shall contain—

"(1) a general description of the Corporation's operations;

"(2) a summary of the Corporation's operating and financial performance, including an explanation of the decision to pay or not pay dividends; and

"(3) copies of audit reports prepared in conformance with section 1509 of this title and the provisions of the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended.

"b. A copy of the annual report shall be provided to the President, the Secretary, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate, and the appropriate committees of the House of Representatives. Such reports shall be completed not later than ninety days following the close of each fiscal year and shall accurately reflect the financial position of the Corporation at fiscal year end, inclusive of any impairment of capital or ability of the Corporation to comply with the provisions of this title.

"SEC. 1511. CONTROL OF INFORMATION.—

"a. The term 'Commission' shall be deemed to include the Corporation wherever such term appears in section 141 and subsections a. and b. of section 142 of title I.

"b. No contracts or arrangements shall be made, nor any contract continued in effect, under section 1401, 1402, 1403, or 1404, unless the person with whom such contract or arrangement is made, or the contractor or prospective contractor, agrees in writing not to permit any individual to have access to Restricted Data, as defined in section 11 y. of title I, until the Office of Personnel Management shall have made an investigation and report to the Corporation on the character, associations, and loyalty of such individual, and the Corporation shall have determined that permitting such person to have access to restricted data will not endanger the common defense and security.

"c. The restrictions detailed in subsections b., c., d., e., f., g., and h., of section 145 of title I shall be deemed to apply to the Corporation where they refer to the Commission or a majority of the members of the Commission, and to the Administrator where they refer to the General Manager.

"d. The Administrator shall keep the appropriate congressional committees fully and currently informed with respect to all of the Corporation's activities. To the extent consistent with the other provisions of this section, the Corporation shall make available to any of such committees all books, financial records, reports, files, papers, memoranda, or other information possessed by the Corporation upon receiving a request for such information from the chairman of such committee.

"e. Whenever the Corporation submits to the President, or the Office of Management and Budget, any budget, legislative recommendation, testimony, or comments on legislation, prepared for submission to the Congress, the Corporation shall concurrently transmit a copy thereof to the appropriate committees of Congress.

"f. The Corporation shall have no power to control or restrict the dissemination of information other than as granted by this or any other law.

"SEC. 1512. PATENTS AND INVENTIONS.—

"a. The term 'Commission' shall be deemed to include the Corporation wherever such term appears in section 152 or 153 b.(1) of title I. The Corporation shall pay such royalty fees for patents licensed to it under section 153 b.(1) of title I as are paid by the Department under that provision. Nothing in title I or this title shall affect the right of the Corporation to require that patents granted on inventions, that have been conceived or first reduced to practice during the course of research or operations of, or financed by the Corporation, be assigned to the Corporation.

"b. The Department shall notify the Corporation of all reports heretofore or hereafter filed with it under subsection 151 c. of title I and all applications for patents heretofore or hereafter filed with the Commissioner of Patents of which the Department has notice under subsection 151 d. of title I or otherwise, whenever such reports or applications involve matters pertaining to the functions or responsibilities of the Corporation in accordance with this title. The Department shall make all such reports available to the Corporation, and the Commissioner of Patents shall provide the Corporation access to all such applications. All reports and applications to which access is so provided shall be kept in confidence by the Corporation, and no information concerning the same given without authority of the inventor or owner unless necessary to carry out the provisions of any Act of Congress.

"c. The Corporation, without regard for any of the conditions specified in paragraph 153 c. (1), (2), (3), or (4) of title I, may at any time make application to the Department for a patent license for the use of an invention or discovery useful in the production or utilization of special nuclear material or atomic energy covered by a patent when such patent has not been declared to be affected with the public interest under subsection 153 b. (1) of title I and when use of such patent is within the Corporation's authority. Any such application shall constitute an application under subsection 153 c. of title I subject, except as specified above, to all the provisions of subsections 153 c., d., e., f., g., and h., of title I.

"d. With respect to the Corporation's functions under this title, section 158 of title I shall be deemed to include the Corporation within the phrase, 'any other licensee' in the first sentence thereof and within the phrase 'such licensee' in the second sentence thereof.

"e. The Corporation shall not be liable directly or indirectly for any damages or financial responsibility under section 183 of title 35, United States Code with respect to secrecy orders imposed under section 181 of such title.

"f. The Corporation shall not be liable or responsible for any payments made or awards under subsection 157 b. (3) of title I, or any settlements or judgments involving claims for alleged patent infringement except to the extent that any such awards, settlements or judgments are attributable to activities of the Corporation after the effective date of this title.

"g. The Corporation shall keep currently informed as to matters affecting its rights and responsibilities under chapter 13 of title I as modified by this section and shall take all appropriate action to avail itself of such rights and satisfy such responsibilities. The Department in discharging its responsibilities under chapter 13 of title I shall exercise diligence in informing the Corporation of matters affecting the responsibilities and jurisdiction of the Corporation and seeking and following as appropriate the advice and recommendation of the Corporation in such matters.

"CHAPTER 26. LICENSING, TAXATION, AND MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

"SEC. 1601. LICENSING.—

"a. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, with respect solely to facilities, equipment and materials for activities related to the isotopic separation of uranium by the gaseous diffusion technology at facilities in existence as of the date of enactment of this title, the Corporation and its contractors are hereby exempted from the licensing requirements and prohibitions of sections 57, 62, 81 and other provisions of title I, to the same extent as the Department and its contractors are exempt in regard to the Department's own functions and activities. Such exemption shall remain in effect unless and until the Corporation and its contractors receive all necessary licenses for such facilities, equipment and materials as are required under title I.

"b. Within two years of the enactment of this title, the Commission shall promulgate regulations or issue other regulatory guidance under title I for the licensing of facilities described in subsection a. that employ the gaseous diffusion technology.

"c. Within one year after the promulgation of regulations or the issuance of other regulatory guidance under subsection b., the Corporation and its contractors shall make necessary applications for and otherwise seek to obtain such licenses as will remove the exemption provided under subsection a. As part of its application, the Corporation shall submit an Environmental Impact Statement in accordance with the requirements of the National Environmental Policy Act. The Commission shall adopt this statement to the extent practicable under the National Environmental Policy Act. In preparing such statement, the Corporation, and in making any licensing decision, the Commission, shall not consider the need for such facilities, alternatives to such facilities, or the costs compared to the benefits of such facilities. The Commission shall act on licensing requests by the Corporation in a timely manner.

"d. The Corporation shall not transfer or deliver any source, special nuclear or byproduct materials or production or utilization facilities, as defined in title I, to any person who is not properly qualified or licensed under the provisions of title I.

"e. The Corporation shall be subject to the regulatory jurisdiction of the Commission and the Department of Transportation with respect to the packaging and transportation of source, special nuclear and byproduct materials.

"SEC. 1602. EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION AND PAYMENTS IN LIEU OF TAXES.—

"a. In order to render financial assistance to those States and localities in which the facilities of the Corporation are located, the Corporation is authorized and directed beginning in fiscal year 1997 to make payments to state and local governments as provided in this section. Such payments shall be in lieu of any and all State and local taxes on the real and personal property, activities and income of the Corporation. All property of the Corporation, its activities, and income are expressly exempted from taxation in any manner or form by any State, county, or other local government entity. The activities of the Corporation for this purpose shall include the activities of organizations pursuant to cost-type contracts with the Corporation to manage, operate and maintain its facilities. The income of the Corporation shall include income received by such organizations for the account of the Corporation. The income of the Corporation shall not include income received by such organizations for their own accounts, and such income shall not be exempt from taxation.

"b. Beginning in fiscal year 1997, the Corporation shall make annual payments, in amounts determined by the Corporation to be fair and reasonable, to the State and local governmental agencies having tax jurisdiction in any area where facilities of the Corporation are located. In making such determinations, the Corporation shall be guided by the following criteria:

"(1) Amounts paid shall not exceed the tax payments that would be made by a private industrial corporation owning similar facilities and engaged in similar activities at the same location: Provided, however, That there shall be excluded any amount that would be payable as a tax on net income.

"(2) The Corporation shall take into account the customs and practices prevailing in the area with respect to appraisal, assessment, and classification of industrial property and any special considerations extended to large-scale industrial operations.

"(3) No amount shall be included to the extent that any tax unfairly discriminates against the class of taxpayers of which the Corporation would be a member if it were a private industrial corporation, compared with other taxpayers or classes of taxpayers.

"(4) Following the commencement of payments in fiscal year 1997, no payment made to any taxing authority for any period shall be less than the payments which would have been made to such taxing authority for the same period by the Department and its cost-type contractors on behalf of the Department with respect to property that has been transferred to the Corporation under section 1505 and which would have been attributable to the ownership, management operation, and maintenance of the Department's uranium enrichment facilities, applying the laws and policies prevailing immediately to the enactment of this title.

"c. Payments shall be made by the Corporation at the time when payments of taxes by taxpayers to each taxing authority are due and payable: Provided, That no payment shall be made to the extent that the tax would apply to a period prior to fiscal year 1997.

"d. The determination by the Corporation of the amounts due hereunder shall be final and conclusive.

"SEC. 1603. MISCELLANEOUS APPLICABILITY OF TITLE I.—

"a. Any references to the term 'Commission' or to the Department in sections 105 b., 161 c., 161 k., 161 q., 165 a., 221 a., 229, 230 and 232 of title I shall be deemed to include the Corporation.

"b. Section 188 of title I shall apply to licensed facilities of the Corporation. For purposes of applying such section to facilities of the Corporation:

"(1) The term 'Commission' shall be deemed to refer to the Secretary;

"(2) There shall be no requirement for payment of just compensation to the Corporation, and receipts from operation of the facility in question shall continue to accrue to the benefit of the Corporation; and

"(3) The Secretary shall have the discretion to determine how and by whom the facility in question will be operated.

"SEC. 1604. COOPERATION WITH OTHER AGENCIES.—The Corporation is empowered to use with their consent the available services, equipment, personnel, and facilities of other civilian or military agencies and instrumentalities of the Federal Government, on a reimbursable basis and on a similar basis to cooperate with such other agencies and instrumentalities in the establishment and use of services, equipment, and facilities of the Corporation. Further, the Corporation may confer with and avail itself of the cooperation, services, records, and facilities of state, territorial, municipal or other local agencies.

"SEC. 1605. APPLICABILITY OF ANTITRUST LAWS.—

"a. The Corporation shall conduct its activities in a manner consistent with the policies expressed in the antitrust laws, except as required by the public interest. Nothing in this Act shall be considered to convey to any person other than the Corporation immunity from civil or criminal liability, or to create a defense to an action, under the antitrust laws.

"b. As used in this subsection, the term 'antitrust laws' means:

"(1) The Act entitled: 'An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies,' approved July 2, 1890 (15 U.S.C. 1–7), as amended;

"(2) The Act entitled, 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes,' approved October 15, 1914 (15 U.S.C. 12–27), as amended;

"(3) Sections 73 and 74 of the Act entitled, 'An Act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' approved August 27, 1894 (15 U.S.C. 8–9), as amended; and

"(4) The Act of June 19, 1936, chapter 592 (15 U.S.C. 13, 13a, 13b, and 21a).

"SEC. 1606. NUCLEAR HAZARD INDEMNIFICATION.—The Administrator shall have the same authority to indemnify the contractors of the Corporation as the Secretary has to indemnify contractors under section 170 d. of title I. Except that with respect to any licenses issued to the Corporation by the Commission, the Commission shall treat the Corporation and its contractors as its licensees for the purposes of Section 170 of this Act.

"SEC. 1607. INTENT.—It is hereby declared to be the intent of this title to aid the Corporation in discharging its responsibilities under this title by providing it with adequate authority and administrative flexibility to assure the maximum achievement of the purposes hereof as provided herein, and this title shall be construed liberally to effectuate such intent.

"SEC. 1608. REPORT.—

"a. Three years after enactment of this title, the Administrator shall submit to the President and to Congress an interim report setting forth the views and recommendations of the Administrator regarding transfer of the functions, powers, duties, and assets of the Corporation to private ownership. Five years after enactment of this title, the Administrator shall submit to the President and the Congress a final report setting forth the views and recommendations of the Administrator regarding transfer of the functions, powers, duties, and assets of the Corporation to private ownership. If the Administrator, in the final report, recommends such transfers, the report shall include a plan for implementation of the transfers.

"b. Within one hundred and eighty days after receipt of the final report under subsection a., the President shall transmit to Congress his recommendations regarding the report, including a plan for implementation of any transfers recommended by the President and any recommendations for legislation necessary to effectuate such transfers.

"CHAPTER 27. DECONTAMINATION AND DECOMMISSIONING

"SEC. 1701. ESTABLISHMENT.—

"a. ESTABLISHMENT OF FUND.—(1) There is hereby established in the Treasury of the United States an account of the Corporation to be known as the Uranium Enrichment Decontamination and Decommissioning Fund (hereinafter referred to in this chapter as the 'Fund'). In accordance with section 1402 j., such account and any funds deposited therein, shall be available to the Corporation for the exclusive purpose of carrying out the purposes of this chapter.

"SEC. 1702. DEPOSITS.—Within sixty days of the end of each fiscal year, the Corporation shall make a payment into the Fund in an amount equal to the costs of decontamination and decommissioning that have been recovered during such fiscal year by the Corporation in its prices and charges established in accordance with section 1508 for products, materials, and services.

"SEC. 1703. PERFORMANCE AND DISBURSEMENTS.—

"a. When the Corporation determines that particular property should be decommissioned or decontaminated, or both, or with respect to the Oak Ridge Gaseous Diffusion Plant at such time as the plant is conveyed to the Corporation, the Corporation shall enter into a contract for the performance of such decommissioning and decontamination.

"b. The Corporation shall pay for the costs of such decommissioning and decontamination out of amounts contained within the Fund.".

Subtitle B—Uranium

PART 1—SHORT TITLE, FINDINGS AND PURPOSE, DEFINITIONS

SEC. 10211. SHORT TITLE.—This subtitle may be cited as the "Uranium Security and Tailings Reclamation Act of 1992."

SEC. 10212. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.—(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds for purposes of this subtitle that—

(1) the United States uranium industry has long been recognized as vital to United States energy independence and as essential to United States national security, but has suffered a drastic economic setback, including a 90 per centum reduction in employment, closure of almost all mines and mills, more than a 75 percent drop in production, and a permanent loss of uranium reserves;

(2) during the remainder of this century approximately 20 per centum of United States electricity is expected to be produced from uranium fueled powerplants owned by domestic electric utilities;

(3) the United States has been the leading uranium producing Nation and holds extensive proven reserves of natural uranium that offer the potential for secure sources of future supply;

(4) a variety of economic factors, policies of foreign governments, foreign export practices, the discovery and development of low cost foreign reserves, new Federal regulatory requirements, and cancellation of nuclear powerplants have caused most United States producers to close or suspend operations over the past six years and have resulted in the domestic uranium industry being found "not viable" by the Secretary under provisions of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended;

(5) providing assistance to the domestic uranium industry is essential to—

(A) preclude an undue threat from foreign supply disruptions that could hinder the Nation's common defense and security,

(B) assure an adequate long-term supply of domestic uranium for the Nation's nuclear power program to preclude an undue threat from foreign supply disruptions or price controls, and

(C) aid in the Nation's balance-of-trade payments through foreign sales;

(6) the Uranium Mill Tailings Radiation Control Act of 1978 (42 U.S.C. 7901–7942)—

(A) was enacted to provide for the reclamation and regulation of uranium and thorium mill tailings; and

(B) did not provide for a Federal contribution for the reclamation of tailings at uranium and thorium processing sites which were generated pursuant to Federal defense contracts;

(7) the owners or licensees of active uranium and thorium sites and the Federal Government have each benefitted from uranium and thorium produced at the active sites, and it is equitable that they share in the costs of reclamation, decommissioning and other remedial actions at the commingled sites; and,

(8) the creation of an assured system of financing will greatly facilitate and expedite reclamation and remedial actions at active uranium and thorium processing sites.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of parts 2 and 3 of this subtitle to—

(1) ensure an adequate long-term supply of domestic uranium for the Nation's common defense and security and for the Nation's nuclear power program;

(2) provide assistance to the domestic uranium industry; and

(3) establish, facilitate, and expedite a comprehensive system for financing reclamation and other remedial action at active uranium and thorium processing sites.

SEC. 10213. DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subtitle—

(1) the term "active site" means—

(A) any uranium or thorium processing site, including the mill, containing by-product material for which a license (issued by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission or its predecessor agency under the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, or by a State as permitted under section 274 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 2021)) for the production at such site of any uranium or thorium derived from ore—

(i) was in effect on January 1, 1978;

(ii) was issued or renewed after January 1, 1978; or

(iii) for which an application for renewal or issuance was pending on, or after January 1, 1978; and

(B) any other real property or improvement on such real property that is determined by the Commission to be—

(i) in the vicinity of such site; and

(ii) contaminated with residual by-product material;

(2) the term "byproduct material" has the meaning given such term in section 11e.(2) of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended (42 U.S.C. 2014(e)(2));

(3) the term "civilian nuclear power reactor" means any civilian nuclear powerplant required to be licensed under section 103 or section 104 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended (42 U.S.C. 2133);

(4) the term "Corporation" means the United States Enrichment Corporation established under section 1202 of Title II of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended;

(5) the term "Department" means the Department of Energy;

(6) the term "domestic uranium" means any uranium that has been mined in the United States including uranium recovered from uranium deposits in the United States by underground mining, open-pit mining, strip mining, in situ recovery, leaching, and ion recovery, or recovered from phosphoric acid manufactured in the United States;

(7) the term "domestic uranium producer" means a person or entity who produces domestic uranium and who has, to the extent required by State and Federal agencies having jurisdiction, licenses and permits for the operation, decontamination, decommissioning, and reclamation of sites, structures and equipment;

(8) the term "enrichment tails" means uranium in which the quantity of the U-235 isotope has been depleted in the enrichment process;

(9) the term "reclamation, decommissioning, and other remedial action" includes work, including but not limited to disposal work, accomplished in order to comply with all applicable requirements, including but not limited to those established pursuant to the Uranium Mill Tailings Radiation Control Act of 1978, as amended, or where appropriate, with requirements established by a State that is a party to a discontinuance agreement under section 274 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended (42 U.S.C. 2021). The term shall also include work at an active site prior to the date of enactment of this act accomplished in order to comply with the foregoing requirements;

(10) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Energy;

(11) the terms "source material" and "special nuclear material" have the meaning given such terms in section 11 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended (42 U.S.C. 2014); and

(12) the term "tailings" means the wastes produced by the extraction or concentration of uranium or thorium from any ore processed primarily for its source material content.

PART 2—URANIUM REVITALIZATION

SEC. 10221. VOLUNTARY OVERFEED PROGRAM.—(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Corporation shall establish, for a period of not less than five years commencing at the beginning of fiscal year 1992, a voluntary overfeeding program which shall be made available to the Corporation's enrichment services customers. The term "overfeeding" means the use of uranium in the enrichment process in excess of the amount required at the transactional tails assay.

(b) FINANCIAL INCENTIVE.—The Corporation shall encourage its enrichment services customers to participate in the voluntary overfeeding program as provided in this section. Uranium supplied by the enrichment customer shall be used by the Corporation for voluntary overfeeding in the enrichment process to reduce the amount of power required to produce the enriched uranium ordered by the enrichment services customer. The dollar savings resulting from the reduced power requirements shall be credited to the enrichment services customer.

(c) ADDITIONAL PARTICIPATION.—In the event an enrichment services customer does not elect to provide uranium for voluntary overfeeding to be used to process its enrichment order, the Corporation shall establish a method for such uranium to be voluntarily supplied by other enrichment services customer(s) which have expressed to the Corporation an interest in participating in such a program and the Corporation shall credit the resulting dollar savings realized from the reduced power requirements to the enrichment services customer(s) providing the uranium.

(d) USE OF DOMESTIC URANIUM.—An enrichment services customer providing uranium for voluntary overfeeding shall certify to the Corporation that such uranium is domestic uranium which has been actually produced by a domestic uranium producer after the enactment of this title or domestic uranium actually produced by a domestic uranium producer before the enactment of this title and held by it without sale, transfer or redesignation of the origin of such uranium on a DOE/NRC form 741.

(e) IMPLEMENTATION.—Within ninety days of the date of enactment of this title, the Corporation shall establish procedures to implement this program. Such procedures shall include, but not be limited to, delivery, reporting and certification requirements, and provisions for failure to comply with the requirements of the voluntary overfeeding program. The determination of the voluntary overfeeding credit and sufficient data to support such determination shall be available to the Corporation's enrichment services customers and to qualified domestic producers.

SEC. 10222. NATIONAL STRATEGIC URANIUM RESERVE.—There is hereby established the National Strategic Uranium Reserve under the direction and control of the Secretary. The Reserve shall consist of 50,000,000 pounds of natural uranium contained in stockpiles or inventories currently held by the United States for defense purposes. (b) Reimbursement.—(1) In General.—The Secretary shall, subject to paragraph (2), reimburse at least annually a licensee described in subsection (a) for such portion of the reclamation, decommissioning and other remedial action costs described in such subsection as are—

(A) determined by the Secretary to be attributable to tailings generated as an incident of sales to the United States; and

(B) incurred by such licensee not later than December 31, 2002.

(2) Amount.—

(A) To individual active site uranium licensees.—The amount of reimbursement paid to any licensee under paragraph (1) shall be determined by the Secretary in accordance with regulations issued pursuant to section 10232 and shall not exceed an amount equal to $4.50 multiplied by the dry short tons of tailings located at the site as of the effective date of this subtitle and generated as an incident of sales to the United States.

(B) To all active site uranium licensees.—Payments made under paragraph (1) to active site uranium licensees shall not in the aggregate exceed $270,000,000.

(D) Inflation escalation index.—The amounts in subparagraphs (A), (B) and (C) shall be increased annually based upon an inflation index. The Secretary shall determine the appropriate index to apply.

(E) Additional reimbursement.—Provided however, That (i) the Secretary shall determine as of July 31, 2005, whether the amount authorized to be appropriated in section 10233, when considered with the $4.50 per dry short ton limit on reimbursement, exceeds the total cost reimbursable to the licensees of active sites for reclamation, decommissioning and other remedial action; and (ii) if the Secretary determines there is an excess, the Secretary may allow reimbursement in excess of $4.50 per dry short ton on a prorated basis at such sites that reclamation, decommissioning and other remedial action costs for tailings generated as an incident of sales to the United States exceed the $4.50 per dry short ton limitation.

Sec. 10232. Regulations.—The Secretary shall issue regulations governing reimbursement under section 10231. An active uranium or thorium processing site owner shall apply for reimbursement hereunder by submitting a statement for the amount of reimbursement, together with reasonable documentation in support thereof, to the Secretary. Any such statement for reimbursement, supported by reasonable documentation, shall be approved by the Secretary and reimbursement therefor shall be made in a timely manner subject only to the limitations of section 10231.

Sec. 10233. Authorization.—There is authorized to be appropriated for purposes of this part not more than $300,000,000 increased annually as provided in section 10231 based upon an inflation index as determined by the Secretary.

Part 4—Import of Uranium, Enriched Uranium, and Uranium Enrichment Services

Sec. 10241. Findings and Purposes.—(a) Findings.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the domestic uranium industry and the economic viability of the Federal uranium enrichment enterprise may be threatened by exports of uranium and enriched uranium from non-market economy countries at prices which represent less than the cost of producing uranium or enriching uranium; and

(2) the national security and defense interests of the United States require that appropriate actions be taken to assure that the nuclear energy industry in the United States does not become unduly dependent on foreign sources of uranium or uranium enrichment services.

(b) Purposes.—The purposes of this part are to—

(1) determine whether any uranium or enriched uranium is being exported by nonmarket economy countries at prices which represent less than the cost of producing such commodities; and

(2) provide for appropriate actions to assure the viability of the domestic uranium industry and the Federal uranium enrichment enterprise in order to protect the national security and defense interests of the United States.

Sec. 10242. Definitions.—For purposes of this part, the term—

(1) "Administrator" means the Administrator of the Energy Information Administration;

(2) "Federal uranium enrichment enterprise" means the uranium enrichment activities of the Department of Energy or the United States Enrichment Corporation; and

(3) "utility regulatory authority" means any State agency or Federal agency that has ratemaking authority with respect to the sale of electric energy by any electric utility or independent power producer, except that for the purposes of this paragraph, the terms "electric utility", "State agency", "Federal agency", and "ratemaking authority" have the same meanings as the terms have under section 3 of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978.

Sec. 10243. (A) the views of the executive branch on the Commission's report; and

(B) what action, if any, the President plans to take in response to the Commission's report concerning the impact of transactions in enriched and non-enriched uranium and the provision of uranium enrichment services by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the People's Republic of China, and, as appropriate, other nonmarket economy countries, on the domestic uranium enrichment industry, including but not limited to the status of any negotiations with such countries in regard to such transactions and provision of services.

(2) Should the President determine that no action by the executive branch is necessary in response to the Commission's report, his report to the Congress shall include a detailed statement of the reasons for such determination, including an explanation of why the absence of action by the executive branch will not adversely affect the economic well-being of the domestic uranium enrichment industry.

(b) Cooperation.—The Secretary, the Administrator, and the Secretary of Commerce shall cooperate fully with the United States International Trade Commission in its investigation under section 332(g).

Sec. 10244. Uranium Purchase Reports.—(a) Annual Reports.—By January 1 of each year, the owner or operator of any civilian nuclear power reactor shall report to the Secretary, acting through the Administrator, for activities of the previous fiscal year—

(b) Congressional Access.—The information provided to the Secretary pursuant to this section shall be made available to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate and appropriate committees of the United States House of Representatives by March 1 of each year.

(c) Country of Origin.—For the purposes of this section, the term "country of origin" means,

(1) with respect to uranium, that country where the uranium was mined, or

(2) with respect to enriched uranium, that country where the uranium was mined and enriched; or

(3) with respect to enrichment services, that country where the enrichment services were performed.

Sec. 10245. Regulatory Treatment of Uranium Purchases.—(a) Encouragement.—

The Secretary shall encourage States and utility regulatory authorities to take into consideration the achievement of the objectives and purposes of this part, including the national need to avoid dependence on imports, when considering whether to allow the owner or operator of any electric power plant to recover in its rates and charges to customers any cost of purchase of domestic uranium, enriched uranium, or enrichment services from a non-affiliated seller greater than the cost of non-domestic uranium, enriched uranium or enrichment services.

(b) REPORT.—Within one year of the date of enactment of this part, and annually thereafter, the Secretary shall report to Congress on his progress in encouraging actions by State regulatory authorities pursuant to subsection (a). Such report shall include detailed information on programs initiated by the Secretary to encourage appropriate State regulatory action and recommendations, if any, on further action that could be taken by the Secretary, other Federal agencies, or the Congress in order to further the purposes of this part.

(c) DEFINITION OF NON-AFFILIATE.—As used in this section, a seller is "non-affiliated" if it does not control, and is not controlled by or under common control with the buyer.

SEC. 10246. UNITED STATES PURCHASE OF ENRICHED URANIUM.—(a) AUTHORIZATION.—Subject to the limitations of subsection (b), the Secretary or the United States Enrichment Corporation is authorized to purchase enriched uranium from other sources of enriched uranium at prices below the production costs of the Department of Energy or the Corporation, respectively, if such purchases are necessary to reduce productions costs and maintain competitive prices.

(b) USE OF URANIUM.—If enriched uranium purchased by the Secretary or the United States Enrichment Corporation is used to supply enrichment customers, any uranium provided by such customers to the Secretary or the United States Enrichment Corporation as feed material may only be used for rebuilding uranium inventory or for overfeeding purposes.

(1) by adding a new subparagraph (c)(1)(G) as follows—

"(G) Upon application the Commission shall issue a certificate of public convenience and necessity for the construction, extension and operation of facilities for the transportation or sale of natural gas without requiring a hearing or further proof that the public convenience and necessity would be served by those facilities: Provided, That, subject to the provisions of subsection (k) of this section, the requirements of subsections (i) and (j) of this section are met. Such a certificate shall be non-exclusive and non-prejudicial to any other authorization under the Natural Gas Act or the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978.";

(2) by adding the following three subsections after subsection (h)—

"(i) For the purposes of subparagraph (c)(1)(G) of this section—

"(1) The Commission shall issue a certificate of public convenience and necessity only if it finds that the construction, extension and operation of facilities shall not impair any certificate holder's ability to render adequate service to its customers, and only if, in addition to any other terms the Commission may attach, the following terms and conditions are attached to such certificate to satisfy the following requirements—

"(A) No costs or expenses incurred in relation to the construction, extension and operation of facilities, or the sale of such facilities, covered by a certificate issued pursuant to subparagraph (c)(1)(G) of this section may be included in the rates and charges of any other rate schedule filed with the Commission under this Act or the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978.

"(B) The holder of a certificate issued pursuant to subparagraph (c)(1)(G) of this section shall not be required to credit any revenues received in relation to providing service under such certificate, or the sale of facilities authorized under such certificate, when determining the rates and charges of any other rate schedule filed with the Commission under this Act or the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978.

"(C) Notwithstanding section 15(a) of this Act, the holder of a certificate issued under subparagraph (c)(1)(G) of this section shall not participate in any proceedings (other than those it may subsequently initiate) for the construction, extension or operation of facilities that would serve the same market served by the facilities authorized by the holder's certificate issued under subparagraph (c)(1)(G) of this section.

"(D) Under such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe, the holder of a certificate issued under subparagraph (c)(1)(G) of this section shall file with the Commission within such time and in such form as the Commission may prescribe, and shall keep open in convenient form and place for public inspection, copies of all agreements required to be filed with the Commission pursuant to subsection (j) of this section.

"(E) The holder of a certificate issued under subparagraph (c)(1)(G) of this section shall maintain a separate system of books, accounts and records for the facilities and services authorized under such certificate.

The Commission shall keep and make available for public inspection all agreements required to be filed with the Commission pursuant to this paragraph.

"(2) The rates, charges, classifications or practices for the transportation or sale of natural gas contained in the agreements filed with the Commission pursuant to paragraph (j)(1) of this section shall be presumed to be just and reasonable. If, however, the Commission, after a hearing held upon the petition of a person who has made a bona-fide offer to enter into a contract, or who has entered into a contract, for the transportation or sale of natural gas utilizing facilities authorized in a certificate issued under subparagraph (c)(1)(G) of this section, finds that the failure to provide a requested rate, charge, classification, or practice in connection with the requested transportation or sale of natural gas through facilities constructed, extended or operated under a certificate issued under subparagraph (c)(1)(G) of this section is unjust, unreasonable, unduly discriminatory or preferential, the Commission, considering all relevant factors, shall determine the rates, charges, classification or practices which are not unjust, unreasonable, unduly discriminatory or preferential to be observed and in force with respect to the transportation or sale of natural gas to be provided to the petitioner, and shall fix the same by order; Provided, That the Commission may not order the requested service to the extent that it finds that capacity is not available. Unless the Commission issues a final order on a petition filed pursuant to this paragraph within one hundred and twenty days after it is filed, such petition shall be deemed denied.

"(k) In any case where a certificate providing for construction or extension of facilities under subparagraph (c)(1)(G) of this section is opposed by a local distribution company on grounds that such certificate would result in the displacement of a sale or transportation service being provided by such local distribution company, the Commission shall promptly set the matter for a hearing on the record and shall decide by final order on rehearing issued within 90 days of the filing of such opposition whether such construction or extension of facilities pursuant to the certificate would displace a sale or transportation service being provided by such local distribution company. If the Commission finds that such construction or extension of facilities would result in the displacement of a sale or transportation service being provided by such local distribution company, the application for a certificate of public convenience and necessity filed pursuant to subparagraph (c)(1)(G) of this section shall, at the option of the applicant, be deemed filed for consideration pursuant to subparagraph (c)(1)(A) of this section. For purposes of this subsection, the term "local distribution company" shall have the same meaning as in section 2(17) of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978, and a holder of a service area determination under section 7(f) of this Act shall be considered a local distribution company."; and

SEC. 11103. NEPA COMPLIANCE.—(a) MEMORANDA OF UNDERSTANDING.—The Commission and all relevant Federal agencies are directed to enter into memoranda of understanding which will establish procedures for a consolidated review to the fullest extent possible under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 of Federal actions affecting the authorization of natural gas facilities subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission.

(b) ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT STATEMENTS.—Where environmental documents are prepared in connection with applications for authority to construct, extend or operate facilities under the Natural Gas Act, the Commission may permit, at the election of the applicant, a contractor, consultant or other person funded by the applicant and chosen by the Commission from among a list of such individuals or companies determined by the Commission to be qualified to do such work to prepare such environmental document. The contractor shall execute a disclosure statement prepared by the Commission specifying that it has no financial or other interest in the outcome of the project. The Commission shall establish the scope of work and procedures to assure that the contractor, consultant or other person has no financial or other potential conflict of interest in the outcome of the proceeding. Nothing herein shall affect the Commission's responsibility to comply with the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969.

(c) ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENTS.—Where an environmental assessment is prepared in connection with applications for authority to construct, extend or operate facilities under this Act, the Commission may permit an applicant, or a contractor, consultant or other person selected by the applicant, to prepare such environmental assessment. The contractor shall execute a disclosure statement prepared by the Commission specifying that it has no financial or other interest in the outcome of the project. The Commission shall institute procedures, including pre-application consultations, to advise potential applicants of studies or other information forseeably required by the Commission. The Commission may allow the filing of such applicant-prepared environmental assessments as part of the application. Nothing herein shall affect the Commission's responsibility to comply with the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969.

(d) ENVIRONMENTAL REVIEW.—Any environmental review undertaken by the Commission pursuant to the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969, or by a project sponsor must include those facilities subject to the Natural Gas Act and Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978, but will not include any related nonjurisdictional facilities unless the Commission's control and responsibility over those facilities is sufficient to cause the private action to become a Federal action. To determine whether sufficient control and responsibility by the Commission exists, the following factors must be considered:

(1) whether the regulated activity comprises merely a link in a corridor-type project;

(2) the extent of the nonjurisdictional facilities in the immediate vicinity of the regulated activity;

(3) the extent to which the entire project will be within the jurisdiction of the Commission; and

(4) the extent of cumulative Federal control and responsibility.

(e) As a part of a required NEPA review of proposed facilities, at the beginning, FERC shall meet with the applicant, other affected Federal, State and local agencies, affected Indian Tribes, if any, and other interested persons to identify issues to be analyzed and when serving as the lead agency, FERC may allocate assignments, and establish time frames necessary for the preparation of an Environmental Impact Statement (EIS).

(f) COMMUNICATIONS WITH THE COMMISSION.—The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, within twelve months of the date of enactment of this Act, shall amend its rules governing ex parte communications to clarify that the prohibitions contained in such rules do not apply to communications between the Commission's environmental advisory staff and other Federal and State agencies that are cooperating agencies for purposes of compliance with title I of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4331-35): Provided, That an accurate public record of all such communications shall be kept and made available, and any party to the proceeding with respect to which such communication was made may respond in writing to such communication.

(ii) the criteria for finding that market-based rates for interstate pipeline sales for resale can be deemed to be just and reasonable in circumstances where such sales are made in workably competitive markets, and given such a finding, the criteria for finding that profits and losses occasioned by such sales for resale should not be taken into account in setting the seller's rates for other services.

(C) NATURAL GAS RATEMAKING.—The Commission's criteria for establishing just and reasonable rates under section 4 of the Natural Gas Act—

(i) where the Commission finds that workable competition exists and comparable third-party transportation exists, including criteria for the establishment of market-based rates;

(ii) on a basis other than historical cost, including the criteria for incentive rates; and

(iii) to ensure that all throughout, under both long-term and short-term arrangements, is taken into account in the Commission's determination of used and useful plant for purposes of possible inclusion in rate base.

(3) "independent producer cooperative" shall mean any group of independent producers formed and operated for the purpose of pooling natural gas to enable the cooperative members to bargain effectively for the sale of the natural gas to any person: Provided, That such group is not formed or operated for the purpose of raising prices.

(b) LIMITED ANTITRUST RELIEF.—In any civil action under the antitrust laws, the formation or operation of an independent producer cooperative shall be legal if the procompetitive effects outweigh the anticompetitive effects.

(c) SCOPE.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to make it unlawful for an operator or working interest owner of a well, lease, field, plant or producing unit to market, on behalf of other working interest and royalty owners, the natural gas produced from such well, lease, field, plant or producing unit.

(2) inserting after subparagraph (A) the following new subparagraph:

"(B) In any case not described in the proviso of subparagraph (A), the Commission shall file notice in the Federal Register of the proposed certificate of public convenience and necessity as soon as the required information in connection therewith has been received by the Commission. If no party has filed a protest or objection in response to such notice within sixty days after publication of such notice, the certificate of public convenience and necessity shall be deemed to be issued: Provided, That notwithstanding the filing of a protest or objection a certificate shall be deemed issued if all protests and objections are withdrawn.".

(b) Expedited Procedure for Protests.—Within ninety days of the date of enactment of this Act, the Commission shall institute a rulemaking to establish a procedure for dealing expeditiously with protests which do not raise material issues of fact necessitating an evidentiary hearing.

(c) Certificate Not Required for Replacement Facilities.—Section 7(c)(1) of the Natural Gas Act (15 U.S.C. 717f(c)(1)) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(D) The term 'facilities' as used in this subsection shall exclude facilities which constitute the replacement or repair of existing facilities which have or will soon become physically deteriorated or obsolete to the extent that replacement is deemed advisable, provided (1) that such replacement or repair does not result in a reduction or abandonment of service by means of such facilities, (2) that such replacement or repair has substantially equivalent designed delivery capacity as the particular facilities being replaced or repaired, and (3) that the cost of such replacement or repair shall not exceed $20,000,000 per project, as adjusted pursuant to the Implicit Price Deflator for GNP. Nothing herein shall preclude a natural-gas company from repairing or replacing facilities as may be necessary to meet the requirements of the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act of 1968.".

(d) Conclusive Evidence of Need.—Section 7(c)(1) of the Natural Gas Act (15 U.S.C. 717f(c)(1)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(E) In such hearing under subparagraph (C), proof of binding contractual commitments by bona fide shippers for firm natural gas service to be rendered utilizing the facilities proposed to be constructed or extended shall be conclusive evidence of the need for such proposed service and facilities, and shall be sufficient to dismiss any claim of mutual exclusivity by another applicant.".

Sec. 11111. Deregulation of Pipeline Sales of Natural Gas.—Section 4 of the Natural Gas Act (15 U.S.C. 717c) is amended by adding the following after subsection (g), as added by this title—

"(h) After a hearing held upon the application of a natural-gas company, if the Commission finds that the natural-gas company provides transportation for natural gas owned by any other person comparable to the transportation provided by the natural-gas company for natural gas that it sells for resale and finds that the market that the natural-gas company is authorized to serve is competitive, the Commission may issue an order finding that the natural gas cost component of rates and charges made, demanded, or received by the natural-gas company for the sale for resale of natural gas are exempt from the jurisdiction of the Commission under this Act.".

Sec. 11112. Fuel Use Act Amendment.—Section 403 of the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 as amended (42 U.S.C. 8373) is amended by striking subsection (c) in its entirety.

TITLE XII—OUTER CONTINENTAL SHELF

Subtitle A—Coastal Communities Impact Assistance

Sec. 12101. Definitions.—For purposes of this subtitle only, the term—

(1) "coastline" has the same meaning that it has in the Submerged Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1301 et seq.);

(2) "county" means a unit of general government constituting the local jurisdiction immediately below the level of State government. This term includes, but is not limited to, counties, parishes, villages and tribal governments which function in lieu of and are not within a county, and in Alaska, borough governments. If State law recognizes an entity of general government that functions in lieu of and is not within a county, the Secretary may recognize such other entities of general government as counties;

(3) "coastal State" means any State of the United States bordering on the Atlantic Ocean, the Pacific Ocean, the Arctic Ocean, the Bering Sea or the Gulf of Mexico;

(4) "distance" means minimum great circle distance, measured in statute miles;

(5) "leased tract" means a tract, leased under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act for the purpose of drilling for, developing and producing oil and natural gas resources, which is a unit consisting of either a block, a portion of a block, a combination of blocks and/or portions of blocks, as specified in the lease, and as depicted on an Outer Continental Shelf Official Protraction Diagram;

(6) "new revenues" means monies received by the United States as royalties (including payments for royalty taken in kind and sold pursuant to section 27 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1353)), net profit share payments, and related late-payment interest from natural gas and oil leases issued pursuant to the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, but only from leased tracts from which such revenues are first received by the United States after the date of enactment of this Act;

(7) "Outer Continental Shelf" means all submerged lands lying seaward and outside of the area of "lands beneath navigable waters" as defined in section 2(a) of the Submerged Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1301(a)), and of which the subsoil and seabed are subject to the jurisdiction and control of the United States; and

(8) "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary's designee.

Sec. 12102. Impact Assistance Formula and Payments.—(a) There is established a fund in the Treasury of the United States, which shall be known as the "Coastal Communities Impact Assistance Fund" (hereinafter referred to in this section as "the fund").

(b) The Secretary of the Treasury shall invest excess monies in the fund, at the request of the Secretary, in public debt securities with maturities suitable to the needs of the fund, as determined by the Secretary, and bearing interest at rates determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration current market yields on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States of comparable maturity.

(c) Notwithstanding section 9 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1338), amounts in the fund, together with interest earned from investment thereof, shall be paid at the direction of the Secretary as follows:

(1) The fund shall consist of amounts deposited in the fund from new revenues received beginning with October 1, 1992, representing the amounts determined to be allocable to eligible coastal States and eligible counties pursuant to the formula contained in this section.

(2) The Secretary shall determine the new revenues from any leased tract or portion of a leased tract lying seaward of the zone defined and governed by section 8(g) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1337(g)), the geographic center of which lies within a distance of 200 miles from any part of the coastline of any coastal State (hereinafter referred to as an "eligible coastal State").

(3) The Secretary shall determine the allocable share of new revenues determined under paragraph (2) by multiplying such revenues by 12.5 percent.

(4) The Secretary shall determine the portion of the allocable share of new revenues attributable to each eligible coastal State (hereinafter referred to as the "eligible coastal State's attributable share") based on a fraction which is inversely proportional to the distance between the nearest point on the coastline of the eligible coastal State and the geographic center of the leased tract or portion of the leased tract (to the nearest whole mile). Further, the ratio of an eligible State's attirbutable share to any other eligible State's attributable share shall be equal to the inverse of the ratio of the distances between the geographic center of the leased tract or portion of the leased tract and the coastlines of the respective eligible coastal States. The sum of the eligible coastal States' attributable shares shall be equal to the allocable share of new revenues determined under paragraph (3).

(5) Subject to appropriation, the Secretary shall pay from the fund 50 percent of the eligible coastal States' attributable share, together with the portion of interest earned from investment of the fund which corresponds to that amount, to that State.

(6) Within 60 days of enactment of this Act, the governor of each eligible coastal State shall provide the Secretary with a list of all counties, as defined herein, that are to be considered for eligibility to receive impact assistance payments. This list must include all counties with borders along the State's coastline and may also include counties which are at the closest point no more than 60 miles from the State's coastline and which are certified by the Governor to have significant impacts from Outer Continental Shelf-related activities. For any such county that does not have a border along the coastline, the Governor shall designate a point on the coastline of the nearest county that does have a border along the coastline to serve as the former county's coastline for the purposes of this section. The governor of any eligible coastal State may modify this list whenever significant changes in Outer Continental Shelf activities require a change, but no more frequently than once each year.

(7) The Secretary shall determine, for each county within the eligible coastal State identified by the Governor according to paragraph (6) for which any part of the county's coastline lies within a distance of 200 miles of the geographic center of the leased tract or portion of the leased tract (hereinafter referred to as an "eligible county") 50 percent of the eligible coastal State's attributable share which is attributable to such county (hereinafter referred to as the "eligible county's attributable share") based on a fraction which is inversely proportional to the distance between the nearest point on the coastline of the eligible county and the geographic center of the leased tract or portion of the leased tract (to the nearest whole mile). Further, the ratio of any eligible county's attributable share to any other eligible county's attributable share shall be equal to the inverse of the ratio of the distances between the geographic center of the leased tract or portion of the leased tract and the coastlines of the respective eligible counties. The sum of the eligible counties' attributable shares for all eligible counties within each State shall be equal to 50 percent of the eligible coastal State's attributable share determined under paragraph (4).

(8) Subject to appropriation, the Secretary shall pay from the fund the eligible county's attributable share, together with the portion of interest earned from investment of the fund which corresponds to that amount, to that county.

(9) Payments to eligible coastal States and eligible counties under this section shall be made not later than December 31 of each year from new revenues received and interest earned thereon during the immediately preceding fiscal year, but not earlier than one year following the date of enactment of this Act.

(10) The remainder of new revenues and interest earned in the fund not paid to an eligible State or an eligible county under this section shall be disposed of according to the law otherwise applicable to receipts from leases on the Outer Continental Shelf.

(11) The total amount in the fund shall not exceed $300,000,000 during any fiscal year: Provided, That in the event that the total amount of revenues which would otherwise be deposited in the Fund exceed $300,000,000, the Secretary shall provide each eligible State and eligible county the same percentage of $300,000,000 as such State or county would have received had there not been a cap.

SEC. 12103. USES OF FUNDS.—Funds received pursuant to this subtitle shall be used by the eligible coastal States and eligible counties for—

(a) projects and activities that protect or enhance air quality, water quality, fish and wildlife, wetlands, or other coastal resources;

(b) other activities of such State or county, authorized by the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1451 et seq.), the provisions of subtitle B of title IV of the Oil Pollution Act of 1990 (104 Stat. 523), or the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1251 et seq.); and

(c) administrative costs of complying with the provisions of this subtitle, including the costs associated with the audit required by section 12105.

SEC. 12104. OBLIGATIONS OF ELIGIBLE COUNTIES AND STATES.—(a) PROJECT SUBMISSION.—Prior to the receipt of funds pursuant to this subtitle for any fiscal year, an eligible county must submit to the Governor of the State in which it is located a plan setting forth the projects and activities for which the eligible county proposes to expend such funds. Such plan shall state the amounts proposed to be expended for each project or activity during the upcoming fiscal year.

(b) PROJECT APPROVAL.—Prior to the payment of funds pursuant to this subtitle to any eligible county for any fiscal year, the Governor must approve the plan submitted by the eligible county pursuant to subsection (a) and notify the Secretary of such approval. State approval of any such plan shall be consistent with any State wetlands plan, habitat plan, or environmental restoration plan in effect in such State and with all applicable State and Federal law. In the event that the Governor disapproves any such plan, the funds that would otherwise be paid to the eligible county shall be placed in escrow by the Secretary pending modification and approval of such plan, notwithstanding the provisions of section 12102(c)(10), at which time such funds together with interest thereon shall be paid to the eligible county.

(c) CERTIFICATION.—No later than 60 days after the end of the fiscal year, any eligible county receiving funds under this subtitle must certify to the Governor: (1) the amount of such funds expended by the county during the previous fiscal year; (2) the amounts expended on each project or activity; and (3) the status of each project or activity.

SEC. 12105. AUDIT.—(a) REQUIREMENT FOR AUDIT.—Under regulations promulgated by the Secretary, any coastal State that receives payments under section 12102 shall, for each fiscal year that it receives payments, provide that amounts received thereunder, including amounts paid to eligible counties of such State under section 12102, be subject to audit in accordance with chapter 75 of title 31, United States Code. The audit shall be submitted to the Secretary.

(b) CONTENTS OF AUDIT.—Each audit submitted by a State under subsection (a) shall—

(1) contain a statement of all amounts paid under section 12102 to such State for the fiscal year;

(2) include a statement of all amounts paid to eligible counties of such State pursuant to section 12102.

(c) PRELIMINARY DETERMINATION BY SECRETARY.—(1) After receiving a State's report under this section, the Secretary shall make a preliminary evaluation of each audit submitted pursuant to this section, and determine whether any portion of the amounts received has not been used as required by this subtitle. The Secretary shall publish notice of such determination in the Federal Register.

(2) If the Secretary determines under paragraph (1) that any portion of the amounts received under section 12102 has been misused, the Secretary may suspend, and place in escrow, an amount from any future payment due to the coastal State or eligible county charged with misusing the amounts under section 12102 which is equivalent to the amount misused, pending a final determination pursuant to subsection (d).

(d) FINAL DETERMINATION BY SECRETARY.—If the Secretary, after providing a State or eligible county with an opportunity for a hearing, makes a final determination that any portion of the amounts paid to such State or eligible county under section 12102 was not used as required by this subtitle, the Secretary shall—

(1) provide in writing to the State or eligible county that misused the funds the reasons for the determination and the exact amount that was misused; and

(2) take appropriate action to recover an amount from the State or eligible county that misused the funds equal to that determined to have been misused, including the withholding of such amount from that State or eligible county's future payment under section 12102 or of the amount which may have been suspended under subsection (c)(2). In no event shall funds be withheld from a State due to misuse of funds by an eligible county within such State, or from an eligible county in an instance where the State in which it is located has misused funds.

(e) DISPOSITION OF AMOUNTS WITHHELD.—(1) If no appeal of a final determination under subsection (d) is filed within 60 days following the notification described in subsection (d)(1), any amounts withheld or otherwise recovered by the Secretary under subsection (d)(2) shall be returned to the Coastal Communities Impact Assistance Fund.

(2) If an appeal of the final determination is filed within the 60-day period specified in paragraph (1), any amounts withheld by the Secretary shall be held in excrow until such time as a final determination is made of the appeal.

(3) In the event that amounts withheld under this section are subsequently paid to the State or eligible county from which they were withheld, such State or county shall also receive interest on such amounts.

SEC. 12106. REGULATIONS.—The Secretary may promulgate any necessary or appropriate regulations to implement this subtitle.

(10) "Secretary" means the Secretary of Commerce or the Secretary's designee.

SEC. 12202. ESTABLISHMENT OF FUND.—There is established in the Treasury of the United States a Fund to be known as the Coastal Resources Enhancement Fund composed of 4 percent of new revenues. The Enhancement Fund shall not exceed $100,000,000 during any fiscal year.

SEC. 12203. BLOCK GRANTS.—(a) BLOCK GRANTS TO STATES.—Subject to the provisions of this section, for fiscal year 1992 and for each subsequent fiscal year, the Secretary shall award to each coastal State a Coastal Resources Enhancement Block Grant from the monies paid into the Enhancement Fund. The Block Grant shall include the amounts separately paid by the Secretary to the local governments of such State under section 12205.

(b) ALLOCATION REPORT.—(1) No coastal State may receive a Block Grant for a fiscal year unless such State has submitted to the Secretary a report for such fiscal year that—

(A) specifies the proposed allocation by such State of the Block Grant among the activities specified in paragraphs (1) through (4) of section 12204;

(B) prescribes the allocation of the local government portion of the Block Grant to specified local governments, for separate payment by the Secretary as provided in section 12205; and

(C) describes each proposed activity receiving funds provided by the Block Grant and the amounts proposed to be expended for each activity.

(2) In order to be eligible for a Block Grant and before submitting the report required under paragraph (1), each coastal State shall provide opportunities for the public to review and comment on the report and shall hold at least one public hearing on such report at a site in the State convenient for encouraging maximum public participation.

(c) STATE TRUST FUND.—No amount of a Block Grant shall be paid from the Enhancement Fund to a coastal State until the State has established a trust fund for the receipt of the portion of such Grant that is paid directly to the State.

(d) FORMULA.—The amount of each Block Grant awarded under subsection (a) shall be determined by the Secretary under a formula established by the Secretary which gives the following weighted consideration to each of the following criteria:

(1) A weight of 50 percent shall be given to the number, location, and impact of the energy facilities located within the coastal zone of each State during the fiscal year immediately preceding the fiscal year for which the grant is to be awarded;

(2) A weight of 25 percent shall be given on the basis of shoreline mileage; and

(3) A weight of 25 percent shall be given on the basis of coastal population.

(e) MINIMUM GRANT LEVELS.—(1) A coastal State shall receive not less than 1.62 percent of the total amount available for Block Grants under this section during any fiscal year.

(2) If, after the calculations required under subsection (d), any coastal State is to receive a Block Grant that is less than the minimum grant level established under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall increase such State's Block Grant to the minimum level. Amounts necessary to make such increases shall be derived by reducing proportionately the Block Grant of each State which, as determined under subsection (d), exceeds the minimum level under paragraph (1).

(f) MAXIMUM GRANT LEVELS.—If, after the calculations required under subsections (d) and (e), any coastal State would receive a Block Grant which is greater than 8 percent of the funds appropriated under this section, the Secretary shall reduce such State's Block Grant to 8 percent. SEC. 12206. AUDIT.—(a) REQUIREMENT FOR AUDIT.—Under regulations promulgated by the Secretary, any State awarded a Block Grant under section 12203(a) shall, for each fiscal year that it is awarded such Grant, provide that amounts received under such Grant, including amounts separately distributed to local governments of such State under section 12205, be subject to audit in accordance with chapter 75 of title 31, United States Code. The audit shall be submitted to the Secretary. The Secretary shall publish notice of such determination in the Federal Register.

(2) If the Secretary determines under paragraph (1) that any portion of the Block Grant has been misused, the Secretary may suspend, and place in escrow, an amount from any future Block Grant which is equivalent to the amount misused, pending a final determination pursuant to subsection (d).

(4) The Federal and State governments are in a position to encourage the utilization of coal combustion byproducts.

(c) Study and Report to Congress.—(1) The Secretary shall conduct a detailed and comprehensive study on the institutional, legal and regulatory barriers to increased utilization of coal combustion byproducts by potential governmental and commercial users. Such study shall identify and investigate barriers found to exist at the Federal, State, or local level, that may have limited or may have the foreseeable effect of limiting the quantities of coal combustion byproducts that are utilized. In conducting this study, the Secretary shall consult with other departments and agencies of the Federal Government, appropriate State and local governments, and the private sector.

(2) Not later than twelve months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit a report to Congress containing the results of the study required by paragraph (1) and the Secretary's recommendations for actions to be taken to increase the utilization of coal combustion byproducts. At a minimum, such report shall identify actions that would increase the utilization of coal combustion byproducts in (A) bridge and highway construction, (B) stabilizing wastes, and (C) procurement by departments and agencies of the Federal Government, by State and local governments, and in federally funded or federally subsidized procurement by the private sector.

Sec. 14113. Establishment of Data Base and Study of Coal Transportation Rates.—(a) Establishment of Data Base.—The Secretary shall establish a data base containing, to the maximum extent practicable, all transportation rates for rail, pipeline, truck, conveyor belt, barge and other modes of transporting domestic coal during the period January 1, 1988 through December 31, 1997. The confidentiality of contract rates shall be preserved and public access to the data base shall be provided under appropriate terms and conditions that protect the confidentiality of specific contract rates.

(b) Study of Coal Transportation Rates.—The Secretary shall study the rates and distribution patterns of domestic coal to determine the impact of the Clean Air Act as amended by the Clean Air Act Amendments of 1990 (Public Law 101-549) and other Federal policies on such rates and distribution patterns. The study shall consider, among other factors—

(1) the extent to which coal transportation rate increases occur as a result of the enactment of the Clean Air Act and other Federal policies;

(2) any increases or decreases in the revenue to variable cost ratios of railroad coal transportation rates during the period of the study and the percentage of the delivered price of coal to electric generating facilities that is attributable to coal transportation rates, during this period;

(3) any changes in the distribution patterns of coal among the various regions of the Nation during the study period; and

(4) any electricity rate increases or decreases in the various regions of the Nation during the period of study that are attributable to coal transportation costs.

(c) Reports to Congress.—The Secretary shall submit an interim report to Congress on January 1, 1993, and a final report to Congress, together with any recommendations, on January 1, 1995. The Secretary shall submit an additional report to Congress, with recommendations, on January 1, 1998. The Administrator of the Energy Information Administration and the Chairmen of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall cooperate fully with the Secretary in the development of the data base and studies authorized by this section.

Sec. 14114. Assistance to Small Coal Operators.—(a) Section 507(c) of the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1977 (30 U.S.C. 1257(c)) is amended to read as follows:

"(c)(1) If the regulatory authority finds that the probable total annual production at all locations of a coal surface mining operator will not exceed 300,000 tons, the cost of the following activities, which shall be performed by a qualified public or private laboratory designated by the regulatory authority, shall be assumed by the regulatory authority upon the written request of the operator in connection with a permit application:

"(A) The determination of probable hydrologic consequences required by subsection (b)(11), including the engineering analyses and designs necessary for the determination.

"(B) The development of cross-section maps and plans required by subsection (b)(14).

"(C) The geologic drilling and statement of results of test borings and core samplings required by subsection (b)(15).

"(D) The collection of archaeological information required by subsection (b)(13) and any other archaeological and historical information required by the regulatory authority, and the preparation of plans necessitated thereby.

"(E) Pre-blast surveys required by section 515(b)(15)(E).

"(F) The collection of site-specific resource information and production of protection and enhancement plans for fish and wildlife habitats and other environmental values required by the regulatory authority under this Act.

"(2) The Secretary shall provide or assume the cost of training coal operators that meet the qualifications stated in paragraph (1) concerning the preparation of permit applications and compliance with the regulatory program, and shall ensure that qualified coal operators are aware of the assistance available under this subsection.".

(b) Reimbursement of Costs.—Section 507 of the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1977 (30 U.S.C. 1257) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h) A coal operator that has received assistance pursuant to subsection (c) (1) or (2) shall reimburse the regulatory authority for the cost of the services rendered if the program administrator finds that the operator's actual and attributed annual production of coal for all locations exceeds 300,000 tons during the 12 months immediately following the date on which the operator is issued the surface coal mining and reclamation permit.".

Subtitle B—Electricity

Sec. 14202. Excess Capacity Study.—The Secretary shall study and report to Congress by June 30, 1992, on any physical impediments to the transfer of excess electrical energy from regions of the country having surpluses to regions of the country having shortages and the reasons therefor.

Sec. 14203. Calculation of Avoided Cost.—Nothing in section 210 of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (Public Law 95-617) requires a State regulatory authority or nonregulated electric utility to treat a cost reasonably identified to be incurred or to have been incurred in the construction or operation of a facility or a project which has been selected by the Department of Energy and provided Federal funding pursuant to the Clean Coal Program authorized by Public Law 98-473 as an incremental cost of alternative electric energy.

Sec. 14204. Clean Coal Technology Regulatory Incentives.—(a) Definition.—For purposes of this section, the term "clean coal technology" means any technology, including technologies applied at the precombustion, combustion, or postcombustion stage, at a new or existing facility which will achieve significant reductions in air emissions of sulfur dioxide or oxides of nitrogen associated with the utilization of coal in the generation of electricity, process steam, or industrial products, which is not in widespread use as of the date of enactment of this title.

(b) Federal Rate Incentives.—(1) Within twenty-four months after enactment of this section, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission shall complete a rulemaking to establish a demonstration program for regulatory incentives to promote the development of clean coal technologies and other innovative control technologies that limit power plant emissions. The regulatory incentives shall include—

(A) establishment of an incentive rate of return for clean coal or other innovative emission control technologies that recognizes their inherent risk; and

(B) allowance of a ten- to twenty-year amortization period to recover the capital costs of a clean coal or other innovative emission control technology.

(2) The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission demonstration program is subject to the following—

(A) the program initially will have a five-year life;

(B) the program will cover no more than four units in each technology class; and

(C) the technology classes eligible for the program should be reasonably likely to realize significant cost reductions when employed.

(3) At the end of the five-year demonstration program, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission shall review the merits of the program and determine whether it should be extended or made permanent.

(c) FERC Preapproval of Prudence for Clean Coal Technology Costs.—The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission shall establish a process for negotiating with potential developers of clean coal technology or other innovative control technology projects to agree upon cost caps for future projects and preapproval of the prudency of expenses for those projects if the expenses fall within the agreed-upon cap.

(d) Priority for Units Located in States With Incentive Programs.—To the extent practicable, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission shall, in the selection of units which will be provided incentive rate treatment under subsections (b) or (c), give priority to units located in states where—

(1) the State regulatory commission with jurisdiction over the retail rates of the utility seeking such incentive rate treatment has approved comparable incentives for inclusion in the utility's retail rates, or, if the utility makes no retail sales, where comparable retail rate treatment has been approved for other utilities which make retail sales in the State or States in which the wholesale customers of the utility seeking such incentive rate treatment are located; and

(2) the State regulatory commission accords, to the extent relevant and within its jurisdiction, similar incentives to noninvestor-owned utilities on a basis no less favorable than that accorded to investor-owned utilities within its jurisdiction.

(e) ENCOURAGEMENT OF STATE INCENTIVE PROGRAMS.—(1) Because the use of clean coal technologies is in the Nation's interest, States, including their agencies and political subdivisions which regulate public utility rates and charges, are encouraged to provide additional incentives for their implementation. Those incentives may include, but are not limited to—

(A) preapproval of recovery of capital costs and other expenses, within reasonable bounds agreed upon before project construction;

(B) elimination of retroactive 'used and useful' reviews for clean coal technologies;

(C) rapid amortization of clean coal technology expenditures; and

(D) immediate recovery of a portion of clean coal technology expenses through a fuel adjustment clause or by some other method.

(2) REPORT OF THE SECRETARY.—(A) Within one year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall report to Congress on his progress in encouraging State regulatory authorities to provide regulatory incentives to utilities to invest in clean coal technologies. Such report shall include detailed information on programs initiated by the Department of Energy to encourage such State action and shall describe any regulatory incentives that have been adopted by States as a result of actions taken by the Secretary.

(B) The report required under subparagraph (A) shall also include recommendations, if any, on further action that could be taken by the Department of Energy, other Federal agencies, or the Congress in order to encourage State regulatory authorities to provide regulatory incentives.

Subtitle C—Innovative Technology Transfer

SEC. 14301. INNOVATIVE CLEAN COAL AND RENEWABLE ENERGY TECHNOLOGY TRANSFER PROGRAM.—(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall, in consultation with the Clean Coal Technology Export Coordinating Council and the Committee on Renewable Energy Commerce and Trade, undertake a clean coal and renewable energy technology transfer program designed to encourage the utilization of United States technologies in commercial demonstration energy technology projects to be proposed by United States firms in host nations.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of the energy technology transfer program under this section is to—

(1) reduce the United States balance of trade deficit through the export of United States energy technologies and technological expertise;

(2) retain jobs in the United States through the manufacturing of capital goods associated with new energy technology projects located in other nations;

(3) encourage the foreign commerce in, and use of, commercially available United States technologies in those nations that have determined a need to construct facilities to provide useful energy derived from coal or renewable energy resources;

(4) develop markets for United States technologies and, where appropriate, United States coal resources, to be utilized in meeting the energy and environmental requirements of other nations;

(5) better ensure that United States participation in energy-related projects in other nations includes—

(A) participation by United States firms; and

(B) utilization of United States technologies that have been developed or demonstrated in the United States through publicly or privately funded demonstration programs; and

(6) provide for the accelerated demonstration of United States technologies that will serve to introduce into other nations United States technologies that—

(A) use coal or renewable energy resources in a cost-effective and environmentally acceptable manner; and

(B) serve to ensure the introduction of United States firms and expertise in those nations.

(c) IDENTIFICATION.—(1) The Secretary shall—

(A) after consultation with the Clean Coal Technology Export Coordinating Council and the Committee on Renewable Energy Commerce and Trade regarding the data and information obtained by the Council pursuant to section 14109(e) of this title, identify energy technology projects that may be developed in host nations that would be candidates for the application of a clean coal technology or a renewable energy technology;

(B) consult with appropriate government officials of a host nation, and, as appropriate, with representatives of non-United States electric utilities or other non-United States entities, to determine the interest in and support for an energy technology project that is identified under subparagraph (A).

(2) Within 240 days after the date of enactment of this Act, and subsequently as appropriate, the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register and the Commerce Business Daily a list specifying those clean coal technology or renewable energy technology projects identified under paragraph (A) which, in the judgment of the Secretary, there is a reasonable likelihood will be proposed under the authorities provided by this section.

(d) SOLICITATIONS FOR PROJECT PROPOSALS.—(1) Within 120 days after issuance of the list in subsection (c)(2), and subsequently as appropriate thereafter, the Secretary shall issue a request for proposals from United States firms for the design, construction, testing, and operation of the energy technology project or projects specified on such list which propose to utilize a United States technology. Such request for proposals shall enable the Secretary to accept proposals on a continuous basis after the initial publication of the request for proposals.

(2) Requests for proposals shall include the following requirements:

(A) Unless otherwise herein specified, the request for proposals shall be governed by the requirements and procedure set forth in RFP No. DE-PS01-90FE62271 Clean Coal Technology IV as administered by the Department of Energy.

(B) The host nation in which the project is to be located shall be a participant in the proposed project and shall agree to provide, in combination with any non-United States entity participant, directly or indirectly, at least 50 percent of the cost of the project or such greater amount as may be warranted by the financial circumstances of the host nation and any non-United States entity participant, as determined by the Secretary.

(C) The project shall utilize a United States energy technology and, where appropriate, United States coal resources, in meeting the applicable energy and environmental requirements of the host nation.

(D) The project shall be proposed by and undertaken with a United States firm, although a joint venture or other teaming arrangement with a non-United States manufacturer or other non-United States entity is permissible.

(E) At least 50 percent of the cost of any equipment furnished in connection with an energy technology project authorized under this section shall be attributable to the components of such equipment manufactured in the United States. In determining whether the cost of United States components equals or exceeds 50 percent, the cost of assembly of such United States components in the host nation shall not be considered a part of the cost of such United States component.

(e) SELECTION OF PROJECTS.—(1) The Secretary, in consultation with the Clean Coal Technology Export Coordinating Council or the Committee on Renewable Energy Commerce and Trade, may, not later than 120 days after receipt of proposals in response to the initial solicitation under subsection (d), select at least two proposals for negotiation of cooperative agreements under this section.

(2) In selecting a proposal and in negotiating a cooperative agreement under this section, the Secretary shall consider—

(A) the ability of the United States firm, in cooperation with the host nation, to undertake and complete the proposed commercial demonstration project;

(B) the degree to which the furnished equipment to be included in the energy technology project is manufactured in the United States;

(C) the long-term technical and competitive viability of the United States technology, and the ability of the United States firm to compete in the development of additional energy projects using such technology in the host nation and in other nations;

(D) the extent of technical and financial involvement of the host nation in the commercial demonstration project;

(E) the extent to which the proposed energy technology project meets the objectives stated in subsection (b) of this section; and

(F) such other criteria as the Secretary deems appropriate.

(3) The Secretary, in consultation with appropriate Federal officials, may establish eligibility criteria for host nations.

(f) COST-SHARING.—(1) The Secretary may provide financial assistance to any energy technology project for which a cooperative agreement is entered into pursuant to this section. Such financial assistance may be in the form of grants, or no interest or low interest loans.

(2)(A) Any financial assistance under this subsection may not be greater than 50 percent of the total costs directly and specifically related to any energy technology project which is the subject of a cooperative agreement under this section.

(B) Any financial assistance provided under this section shall be repayable to the United States if, in the judgment of the Secretary, such repayment will not jeopardize the competitive position of the United States firm with respect to the energy technology utilized and technological expertise associated with the selected project.

(g) REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary shall report annually to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate and the House of Representatives on the progress being made, through the cooperative agreements under this section, to introduce clean coal technologies and renewable energy technologies into other nations.

(h) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section, the term—

(1) "host nation" means that foreign country which is—

(A) the participant in or the site of the proposed clean coal technology or renewable energy technology project and

(B) classified as either—

(i) a country eligible to participate in development assistance programs of the Agency for International Development pursuant to applicable law or regulation; or

(ii) a category II or category III country as classified under the guidelines of the export credit arrangement of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development followed by the Export-Import Bank of the United States.

(2) "United States firm" means—

(A) an individual possessing United States citizenship;

(B) a corporation incorporated under the laws of the United States; or

(C) a joint venture or partnership organized under the laws of the United States, each participant of which is an individual or corporation described in subparagraph (A) or (B).

(3) "United States energy technology" means—

(A) a clean coal technology or a renewable energy technology that is determined by the Secretary to be available for commercial use but not widely demonstrated in other than the United States;

(B) a technology which is either owned (50 percent or more) by a United States firm, licensed to a United States firm and owned by another United States firm, or in the public domain; and

(C) the intellectual property embodied in the process and in the furnished equipment being demonstrated.

SEC. 14302. CONVENTIONAL COAL TECHNOLOGY TRANSFER.—(a) If the Clean Coal Technology Export Coordinating Council determines that a United States conventional coal technology would constitute a substantial improvement in efficiency, costs, and environmental performance relative to the energy technology being used in a less developed country with significant indigenous coal resources, such technology shall, for purposes of sections 14109 and 14301, be considered a clean coal technology. In the case of combustion technologies, only the retrofit, repowering, or replacement of a conventional technology shall constitute a substantial improvement for purposes of this section.

(b) In carrying out this subtitle, the Council shall give highest priority to promoting the most environmentally sound and energy efficient technologies.

TITLE XV—PUBLIC UTILITY HOLDING COMPANY ACT REFORM

SEC. 15101. EXEMPT WHOLESALE GENERATORS.—(a) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this title, the term—

(1) "exempt wholesale generator" means any person who: (A) is engaged directly, or indirectly through one or more affiliates of such person, as defined under section 2(a)(11)(B) of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 (15 U.S.C. 79b(a)(11)(B)), exclusively in the business of owning or operating, or both owning and operating, all or part of one or more eligible facilities and selling electric energy at wholesale, but such term excludes an affiliate of a registered holding company which was in existence as of the date of enactment of this title, unless the Commission has consented to such affiliate being an exempt wholesale generator; and (B) provides notice to the Commission, in such form as the Commission may prescribe, that such person is an exempt wholesale generator;

(2) "eligible facility" means a facility, wheresoever located, used for the generation of electric energy exclusively for sale at wholesale, including inter-connecting transmission facilities necessary to effect such sale at wholesale, but shall exclude any facility for which consent is required under subsection (c) if such consent has not been obtained. For purposes of this definition, the term "facility" shall include a portion of a facility and shall include a facility the construction of which has not been commenced or completed;

(3) "sale of electric energy at wholesale" shall have the same meaning as provided in section 201(d) of the Federal Power Act, as amended (16 U.S.C. 824(d));

(4) "retail rates and charges" means rates and charges for the sale of electric energy directly to consumers;

(5) "Commission" means the Securities and Exchange Commission; and

(6) "the Act" means the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, as amended (15 U.S.C. 79 et seq.).

(b) APPLICABILITY OF DEFINITIONS IN PUHCA.—All of the terms used in this title and defined in the Act shall have the same meanings as defined therein.

(c) STATE CONSENT FOR ELIGIBLE FACILITIES.—If a rate or charge for, or in connection with, the construction of a facility, or for electric energy produced by a facility (other than any portion of a rate or charge which represents recovery of the cost of a wholesale rate or charge) was in effect under the laws of any State as of the date of enactment of this title, in order for the facility to be considered an eligible facility consent must be obtained from every State commission having jurisdiction over any such rate or charge: Provided, That in the case of such a rate or charge which is a rate or charge of an affiliate of a registered holding company: (1) consent with respect to the facility in question shall be required from every State commission having jurisdiction over the retail rates and charges of the affiliates of such registered holding company; and (2) the approval of the Commission under the Act shall not be required for the transfer of the facility to an exempt wholesale generator.

(d) EXEMPTION OF EWGS FROM PUHCA.—An exempt wholesale generator shall not be considered an electric utility company under section 2(a)(3) of the Act and, whether or not a subsidiary company, an affiliate, or an associate company of a holding company, shall be exempt from all provisions of the Act.

(e) OWNERSHIP OF EWGS BY EXEMPT HOLDING COMPANIES.—Notwithstanding any provision of the Act, a holding company that is exempt under section 3 of the Act shall be permitted without condition or limitation under the Act to acquire and maintain an interest in the business of one or more exempt wholesale generators.

(f) OWNERSHIP OF EWGS BY REGISTERED HOLDING COMPANIES.—Notwithstanding any provision of the Act and the Commission's jurisdiction as provided under subsection (g) of this section, a registered holding company shall be permitted (without the need to apply for, or receive, approval from the Commission, and otherwise without condition under the Act), to acquire and hold the securities, or an interest in the business, of one or more exempt wholesale generators.

(g) FINANCING AND OTHER RELATIONSHIPS BETWEEN EWGS AND REGISTERED HOLDING COMPANIES.—The issuance of securities by a registered holding company for purposes of financing the acquisition of an exempt wholesale generator, the guarantee of securities of an exempt wholesale generator by a registered holding company, the entering into service, sales or construction contracts, and the creation or maintenance of any other relationship in addition to that described in subsection (f) between an exempt wholesale generator and a registered holding company, its affiliates and associate companies, shall remain subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission under the Act: Provided, That—

(1) section 11 of the Act shall not prohibit the ownership of an interest in the business of one or more exempt wholesale generators by a registered holding company (regardless of where facilities owned or operated by such exempt wholesale generators are located), and such ownership by a registered holding company shall be deemed consistent with the operation of an integrated public utility system;

(2) the ownership of an interest in the business of one or more exempt wholesale generators by a registered holding company (regardless of where facilities owned or operated by such exempt wholesale generators are located) shall be considered as reasonably incidental, or economically necessary or appropriate to the operations of an integrated public utility system;

(3) in determining whether to approve (A) the issue or sale of a security by a registered holding company for purposes of financing the acquisition of an exempt wholesale generator, or (B) the guarantee of a security of an exempt wholesale generator by a registered holding company, the Commission shall not make a finding that such security is not reasonably adapted to the earning power of such company or to the security structure of such company and other companies in the same holding company system, or that the circumstances are such as to constitute the making of such guarantee an improper risk for such company, unless the Commission first finds that the issue or sale of such security, or the making of the guarantee, would have a substantial adverse impact on the financial integrity of the registered holding company system;

(4) in determining whether to approve (A) the issue or sale of a security by a registered holding company for purposes other than the acquisition of an exempt wholesale generator, or (B) other transactions by such registered holding company or by its subsidiaries other than with respect to exempt wholesale generators, the Commission shall not consider the effect of the capitalization or earnings of any subsidiary which is an exempt wholesale generator upon the registered holding company system, unless the approval of the issue or sale or other transaction, together with the effect of such capitalization and earnings, would have a substantial adverse impact on the financial integrity of the registered holding company system; and

(5) the Commission shall make its decision under paragraph (3) to approve or disapprove the issue or sale of a security or the guarantee of a security within 120 days of the filing of a declaration concerning such issue, sale or guarantee.

SEC. 15102. OWNERSHIP OF EXEMPT WHOLESALE GENERATORS AND QUALIFYING FACILITIES.—The ownership by a person of one or more exempt wholesale generators shall not result in such person being considered as being primarily engaged in the generation or sale of electric power within the meaning of sections 3(17)(C)(ii) and 3(18)(B)(ii) of the Federal Power Act, as amended (16 U.S.C. 796 (17)(C)(ii) and 796(18)(B)(ii)).

Sec. 15103. Prevention of Stranded Investment.—The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission shall not approve a rate or charge for the sale of electric energy at wholesale by an exempt wholesale generator if such sale of electric energy would result in a State commission not permitting such purchaser to recover in retail rates and charges any portion of its capital investment in an electric generation facility:

(a) which facility was under construction as of the date of enactment of this section; or

(b) upon which portion such purchaser has previously been permitted to earn a rate of return in retail rates and charges subject to such State commission's jurisdiction.

Sec. 15104. Prevention of Sham Wholesale Transactions.—The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission shall not approve a rate or charge for the sale of electric energy at wholesale by an exempt wholesale generator if:

(a) such electric energy would be resold by the purchaser to any electric consumer; and

(b) the purchaser: (1) is not a municipal electric system, state power authority, electric power cooperative or a public utility under State law; or (2) would not utilize transmission or distribution facilities owned by such purchaser to deliver all such electric energy to such electric consumer.

Sec. 15105. Protection Against Abusive Affiliate Transactions; State Authorities; Federal Restriction; Reciprocal Arrangements Prohibited.—(a) In General.—An electric utility company may not enter into a contract to purchase electric energy at wholesale from an exempt wholesale generator if the exempt wholesale generator is an affiliate or associate company of the electric utility company.

(b) State Authority To Exempt From Prohibition.—Notwithstanding subsection (a), an electric utility company may enter into a contract to purchase electric energy at wholesale from an exempt wholesale generator that is an affiliate or associate company of the electric utility company if every State commission having jurisdiction over the retail rates of such electric utility company makes a specific determination in advance of the electric utility company entering into such contract that the transaction will benefit consumers, is in the public interest, and does not violate any State law (including where applicable, least cost planning).

(c) Sale Just and Reasonable.—A rate or charge for the sale of electric energy at wholesale in interstate commerce by an exempt wholesale generator shall not be considered just and reasonable within the meanings of sections 205 and 206 of the Federal Power Act if the rate or charge allows the exempt wholesale generator to receive any unfair advantage resulting from the fact that the purchaser of such electric energy is an affiliate or associate company of such exempt wholesale generator.

(d) Reciprocal Arrangements Prohibited.—Reciprocal arrangements among companies that are not affiliates or associate companies of each other that are entered into in order to avoid the provisions of this section are prohibited.

Sec. 15106. State Authority.—Section 209 of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 824h) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) Except as set forth in paragraph (2), nothing in this Act shall limit the authority of a State commission in accordance with State law to allow or disallow the inclusion of the costs of electric energy purchased at wholesale in retail rates subject to such State commission's jurisdiction: Provided, That the State commission shall have no authority to determine the reasonableness of the wholesale rate or charge (and the terms and conditions thereof): Provided further, That at the request of a utility which has been offered a sale of electric energy at wholesale from an exempt wholesale generator, any State commission with jurisdiction over the retail rates of such utility shall commit to allow or disallow recovery of costs attributable to the utility's proposed action with regard to the offer in advance of the effective date of the action, except that the State may include terms or conditions as a condition of cost recovery as it deems appropriate. The action of the State commission in allowing cost recovery or conditionally allowing cost recovery shall be binding (subject to the terms and conditions, if any of such cost recovery) for purposes of the inclusion of costs in retail rates, except that such commission shall not be bound to the extent there is new information which the State commission believes is relevant and material to such cost recovery.

"(2) An order by the Commission accepting or establishing as just and reasonable the terms of an agreement for the sale and purchase or interchange of electric energy among affiliates of a registered holding company shall preempt the authority of any State commission to determine the prudence of any purchase of electric energy pursuant to that agreement.

"(3) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to: (A) the purchase of electric energy at wholesale by an affiliate of a registered holding company from an exempt wholesale generator; or (B) the purchase of electric energy at wholesale by an affiliate of a registered holding company from a person other than an exempt wholesale generator when the economic substance of such purchase amounts to an indirect purchase of electric energy from an exempt wholesale generator. For purposes of this subsection (d), energy purchased by an affiliate of a registered holding company as a result of the operation of an integrated holding company shall not be deemed to be an indirect purchase of electric energy from an exempt wholesale generator.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection the term—

"(A) 'exempt wholesale generator' has the same meaning as provided in title XV of the National Energy Security Act of 1992;

"(B) 'affiliate' and 'registered holding company' have the same meanings as provided in the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935;

"(C) 'purchase of electric energy at wholesale' means a purchase of electric energy by any person for resale; and

"(D) 'retail rates' means rates and charges for the sale of electric energy to consumers.".

Sec. 15107. State Consideration of the Effects of Power Purchases on Utility Cost of Capital; Consideration of the Effects of Leveraged Capital Structures on the Reliability of Wholesale Power Sellers; and Consideration of Adequate Fuel Supplies.—The Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (Public Law 95-617), as amended, is further amended by inserting the following new paragraph at the end of section 111:

"(8) Consideration of the Effects of Wholesale Power Purchases on Utility Cost of Capital; Effects of Leveraged Capital Structures on the Reliability of Wholesale Power Sellers; and Assurance of Adequate Fuel Supplies.—

"(A) To the extent that a State regulatory authority requires or allows electric utilities for which it has ratemaking authority to consider the purchase of long-term wholesale power supplies as a means of meeting electric demand, such authority shall:

"(i) perform a general evaluation of (A) the potential for increases or decreases in the costs of capital for such utilities, and any resulting increases or decreases in the retail rates paid by electric consumers, that may result from purchases of long-term wholesale power supplies in lieu of the construction of new generation facilities by such utilities (B) the impact on consumers arising from the fact that the exempt wholesale generator will own the eligible facility at the end of the term of a power sales contract;

"(ii) perform a general evaluation of any negative or positive effects on the reliability of electric service provided by such utilities that may result from purchases of long term wholesale power supplies from sellers that have capital structures which employ proportionally greater amounts of debt than the capital structures of such utilities;

"(iii) hold a proceeding to consider whether the use by exempt wholesale generators (as defined in title XV of the National Energy Security Act of 1992) of capital structures employing less than 35 percent equity threatens reliability or provides an unfair advantage for exempt wholesale generators over such utilities;

"(iv) implement procedures for the advance approval or disapproval of the purchase of a particular long term wholesale power supply which procedures reflect the results of evaluations under clauses (i), (ii) and (iii) ; and

"(v) require as a condition for the approval of the purchase of a particular long term wholesale power supply that the seller provide reasonable assurance of its access to sources of fuel adequate to perform its obligations under the terms of the contract for the sale of such power supply.

"(B) For purposes of implementing the provisions of this paragraph, any reference contained in this title to the date of enactment of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 shall be deemed to be a reference to the date of enactment of the National Energy Security Act of 1992.

"(C) Notwithstanding any other provision of Federal law, nothing in this paragraph shall prevent a State regulatory authority from taking such action, including action with respect to the allowable capital structure of exempt wholesale generators, as such State regulatory authority may determine to be in the public interest as a result of performing evaluations under the standards of subparagraph (A).

"(D) Notwithstanding section 124 and paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 112(a), each State regulatory authority shall consider and make a determination concerning the standards of subparagraph (A) in accordance with the requirements of subsections (a) and (b) of this section, without regard to any proceedings commenced prior to the enactment of this paragraph.

"(E) Notwithstanding subsections (b) and (c) of section 112, each State regulatory authority shall consider and make a determination concerning whether it is appropriate to implement the standards set out in subparagraph (A) not later than one year after the date of enactment of this paragraph.".

SEC. 15108. STATE COMMISSION ACCESS TO BOOKS AND RECORDS; PUBLIC ACCESS TO RECORDS AND INFORMATION; DEFINITION.—(a) ACCESS TO BOOKS AND RECORDS.—Each affected State commission shall have continuing and periodic access to relevant financial and other records of the exempt wholesale generator and any electric utility company that is an affiliate or associate company of such exempt wholesale generator relevant to the exercise of such affected State commission's authority. All records and information provided hereunder shall be open to public inspection, and shall be subject to subpoena and other process of law, to the same extent and in the same manner as comparable records and information of electric utility companies under applicable law: Provided further, That trade secrets and other sensitive commercial information shall be exempt from public disclosure or disclosure to potential competitors of such exempt wholesale generator by an affected State commission and shall not be provided to a State commission unless such commission has in place procedures for protecting the confidentiality of such information.

(b) AFFECTED STATE COMMISSION.—For purposes of this section, with respect to a particular exempt wholesale generator an "affected State commission" means any State commission:

(1) having authority over the retail rates of an electric utility company to which such exempt wholesale generator sells electric energy;

(2) having authority over the retail rates of an electric utility company which is an affiliate of such exempt wholesale generator; or

(3) having authority over the retail rates of an electric utility company which is an associate company of such exempt wholesale generator and which is a subsidiary company of a holding company that is exempt under section 3 of the Act.

(c) NONPREEMPTION.—Nothing in this section shall—

TITLE XVII—STRATOSPHERIC OZONE DEPLETION

SEC. 17101. FINDINGS.—The Senate finds that:

(1) The stratospheric ozone layer, which protects all living things from harmful ultraviolet radiation from the sun, has been severely depleted in many areas of the globe.

(2) Recent scientific data show that the ozone layer over densely populated areas of the United States and other countries in the northern midlatitudes has thinned twice as fast as had previously been measured and as had been projected by theoretical models and the depletion is persisting into the warmer months of the year, and has reached significant levels even in summer.

(3) Ozone depletion in the Southern Hemisphere is proceeding even more rapidly than in the Northern Hemisphere.

(4) The incidence of skin cancer and cataracts is expected to rise significantly and the human immune system may be suppressed due to increased exposure to ultraviolet radiation.

(5) Increased exposure to ultraviolet radiation threatens food crops and some wild plants, and interferes with the ability of phytoplankton, the microscopic organisms that are at the base of the oceanic food chain, to photosynthesize and to reproduce.

(6) The scientific evidence shows that chlorofluorocarbons, hydrochlorofluorocarbons, and other halogenated chemicals undergo reactions in the stratosphere that lead to the rapid destruction of the ozone layer.

(7) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency is required under the Clean Air Act Amendments of 1990 to accelerate the scheduled phaseout of ozone-destroying substances if it is determined in the light of scientific evidence that a more stringent schedule is necessary to protect human health and the environment.

(8) The recent scientific findings make necessary a reappraisal of both domestic and international policy on the control of ozone-destroying chemicals.

SEC. 17102. SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that:

(1) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency should accelerate the interim phaseout schedules and the final phaseout date of chlorofluorocarbons, carbon tetrachloride, methyl chloroform, and halons as required pursuant to section 606 of the Clean Air Act Amendments of 1990, and shall provide for complete phaseout as early as possible, taking into account section 604 of the Act.

(2) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency should accelerate the interim phaseout schedule and the final phaseout date of those hydrochlorofluorocarbons that have relatively long atmospheric lifetimes or high ozone depletion potentials.

(3) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency should prioritize efforts to issue regulations, as required pursuant to title VI of the Clean Air Act Amendments of 1990, providing for the recapture and recycling of ozone-destroying substances as used in appliances and motor vehicle air conditioners, and for the elimination of such substances as used in non-essential consumer products.

(4) The President of the United States should urge the Contracting Parties to the Montreal Protocol to accelerate the interim phaseout schedules and the final phaseout date of ozone-destroying chemicals currently covered by the Protocol.

(5) The President should urge the Contracting Parties to include hydrochlorofluorocarbons within the terms of the Montreal Protocol, and to provide for the most rapid phaseout of those hydrochlorofluorocarbons with relatively long atmospheric lifetimes, or high ozone depletion potentials.

(6) The President should urge the Contracting Parties to amend the Protocol to include recapture and recycling provisions and to prohibit the venting or releasing of ozone-destroying chemicals from refrigeration and air conditioning units into the atmosphere by date certain.

(7) The President should urge the Contracting Parties to accelerate the compliance of developing countries with the terms of the Montreal Protocol.

TITLE XIX—GENERAL PROVISIONS

Sec. 19101. Support for United States Workers.—(a) Findings.—The Senate finds that—

(1) the United States worker is one of the most productive in the world;

(2) based on gross domestic product produced per employed person, the United States is rated number one in productivity compared to Canada, Japan, Korea, Germany, and Britain;

(3) according to a study (based on statistics from the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development) during the mid-1980's, America produced almost twice as much as Japan for every man-hour worked;

(4) it was the hard work, dedication, and efficiency of United States workers that made the United States the number one industrial power in the world;

(5) the quality of United States products is one of the best in the world;

(6) the United States leads in many areas including computer software and hardware technology, pharmaceuticals, biotechnology, construction engineering, entertainment, agriculture, and energy and environmental control;

(7) the United States has been able to successfully export to other areas of the world;

(8) the trade deficit with Japan for 1991 is approximately $42 billion;

(9) United States and other foreign auto makers attempting to sell in Japan have less than 3 percent of the Japanese market;

(10) Japan's structural impediments, such as restrictive distribution system, exclusionary business practices, keiretsu relationships, regulatory system, land policy, and predatory pricing practices, prevent United States companies from fairly competing in Japan;

(11) Japan's tariffs and quotas on foreign agricultural goods restrict the import of United States agricultural products into Japan;

(12) Japan continues to violate United States copyright, patent, and trademark protection laws; and

(13) Japan continues to restrict foreign direct investment in certain industries, while the United States permits unrestricted foreign investment.

(b) Sense of the Senate.—It is the sense of the Senate that the Senate objects to—

(1) the comments made by Japan's Speaker of the House, Yoshio Sakurauchi, regarding American workers, and

(2) the statements made by Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa disparaging the American work ethic and undermining the commitment that was made with President Bush.

Sec. 19102. Amendment to Title 11 of the United States Code.—(a) Section 541(b) of title 11, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1) by striking "or" at the end,

(2) in paragraph (2) by striking the period at the end and inserting "; or", and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

"(3) any interest of a debtor in or to liquid or gaseous hydrocarbons which the debtor has transferred or has agreed to transfer through or by a written farmout agreement, or any written agreement directly related thereto.

The trustees' rights, created in sections 365 and 544(a)(3), shall not operate to cancel or otherwise limit the effect of paragraph (3). For purposes of this subsection, the term 'farmout agreement' is a written agreement (A) in which the owner, of the rights to drill, produce or operate liquid or gaseous hydrocarbons on property agrees or is obligated to transfer or assign all or a portion of those rights to another party and (B) in which the other party, its agents or assignees, as consideration, agrees to perform drilling, reworking, recompleting, testing or other similar or related operations to develop or produce liquid or gaseous hydrocarbons on the property. In determining if a farmout agreement exists, the courts shall look to the custom and practices within the oil and gas industry for guidance. This subsection shall not operate to exclude from the debtor's estate the consideration which the debtor retains, receives, or will receive in exchange for transfering its interest in liquid or gaseous hydrocarbons.".

(b) Effective Date.—Except as provided in subsection (c), section 19102 shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) Application of Amendment.—The amendment made by section 19102 shall not apply with respect to any case commenced under title 11 of the United States Code before the date of the enactment of this Act.

Sec. 19103. Limits on Participation by Companies.—A company shall be eligible to receive financial assistance under this Act only if—

(1) the Secretary finds that the company's participation in the Program would be in the economic interest of the United States, as evidenced by investments in the United States in research, development, and manufacturing (including, for example, the manufacture of major components or subassemblies in the United States); significant contributions to employment in the United States; and agreement with respect to any technology arising from assistance provided under this section to promote the manufacture within the United States of products resulting from that technology (taking into account the goals of promoting the competitiveness of United States industry), and to procure parts and materials from competitive suppliers; and

(2) either—

(A) the company is a United States-owned company; or

(B) the Secretary finds that the company is incorporated in the United States and has a parent company which is incorporated in a country which affords to United States-owned companies opportunities, comparable to those afforded to any other company, to participate in any joint venture similar to those authorized under this Act; affords to United States-owned companies local investment opportunities comparable to those afforded to any other company; and affords adequate and effective protection for the intellectual property rights of United States-owned companies.

SEC. 19104. EMERGENCY PETROLEUM SUPPLY.—(a) SHORT TITLE.—This section may be cited as the "Emergency Petroleum Supply Act".

(b) REGIONAL PETROLEUM RESERVE.—Section 157(a) of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6237(a)) is amended—

(1) by designating the first and second sentences as paragraph (1); and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2) For the purpose of carrying out this section—

"(A) any State that is an island shall be considered to be a separate Federal Energy Administration Region, as defined in title 10, Code of Federal Regulations, as in effect on November 1, 1975;

"(B) determinations made with respect to Regions, other than States that are islands, shall be made as if the islands were not part of the Regions; and

"(C) with respect to determinations made for any State that is an island, the term 'refined petroleum product' shall have the same meaning as the term defined in section 3(3).".

(c) PURCHASES FROM THE STRATEGIC PETROLEUM RESERVE BY ENTITIES IN ELIGIBLE INSULAR AREAS.—Section 161 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 6241) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(j)(1)(A) The provisions listed in subparagraph (B) shall apply with respect to each offering of a quantity of a petroleum product during a drawdown of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve.

"(B)(i)(I) Subject to subclause (II), a purchaser located in an eligible insular area, in addition to having the opportunity to submit a competitive bid, may submit (at the time bids are due) a binding offer to purchase a category of petroleum product specified in a notice of sale, and shall thereupon be obligated to purchase the petroleum product at a price equal to the average of the successful bids made for the remaining quantity of the petroleum product within the category that is the subject of the offering.

"(II) A binding offer made pursuant to subclause (I) shall be accompanied by a certification made by the Governor or other chief executive officer of the eligible insular area that the petroleum product is necessary to avert a critical supply shortage in the eligible insular area.

"(ii)(I) Subject to subclause (II), a vessel that arrives at a delivery line of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve to take on a petroleum product for delivery to a purchaser located in an eligible insular area shall be loaded ahead of other vessels waiting for delivery if the Governor or other chief executive officer of the eligible insular area has certified that delivery must be expedited in order to avert a critical supply shortage in the eligible insular area.

"(II) The Secretary may waive the priority loading requirement of subclause (I) with respect to a particular vessel waiting for delivery if the Secretary determines that the requirement is impracticable.

"(2)(A) In administering this subsection, and with regard to each offering, the Secretary shall—

"(i) impose the limitation listed in clause (i) or (ii) of subparagraph (B), whichever results in the purchase of the lesser quantity; and

"(ii) at the request of a purchaser, adjust upward, to the next whole-number increment of a full tanker load, the quantity to be sold to the purchaser if the quantity is less than 50 percent less than a whole-number increment of a full tanker load of a petroleum product.

"(B)(i) The Secretary shall limit the quantity that any one purchaser may purchase through a binding offer at any one offering to 1/12 of the total quantity of petroleum products that the purchaser imported during the previous year.

"(ii)(I) The Secretary shall limit the quantity that may be purchased through binding offers at any one offering to 3 percent of the offering.

"(II) If the Secretary imposes the limitation listed in subclause (I), the Secretary shall prorate the quantity among the purchasers who submitted binding offers.

"(3)(i) Except as provided in clause (ii), petroleum products purchased through binding offers pursuant to this subsection shall be delivered to the eligible insular area.

"(ii) Purchasers may enter into exchange or processing agreements that require delivery to other locations.

"(4) As used in this subsection:

"(A) The term 'eligible insular area' means the State of Hawaii, Guam, American Samoa, and the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands.

"(B) The term 'offering' means a solicitation for bids—

"(i) that is to be submitted not later than any specified day for a quantity or quantities of a petroleum product from a delivery line of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve; and

"(ii) for a distribution with respect to which the President has made a finding pursuant to subsection (d).".

SEC. 19105. ALTERNATIVE MINIMUM TAX.—It is the sense of the Senate that the Senate Committee on Finance should review the impact of the alternative minimum tax on domestic oil and gas producers and domestic oil and gas production and take such action as may be appropriate to promote domestic production.

SEC. 19106. RADIATION EXPOSURE COMPENSATION.—Section 6 of the Radiation Exposure Compensation Act (42 U.S.C. 2210 note) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(1) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—An individual whose claim for compensation under this Act is denied may seek judicial review solely in a district court of the United States. The court shall review the denial on the administrative record and shall hold unlawful and set aside the denial if it is arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law.".

SEC. 19107. ALTERNATIVE TRANSPORTATION FUELS AND ELECTRIC VEHICLES.—(a)(1) The United States is the largest consumer of oil in the world, exhausting 17 million barrels of oil per day, a 14 percent increase since 1983.

(2) The United States domestic production is in decline, estimated to fall below nine million barrels of oil per day by 1995. Today, oil imports have risen to over 40 percent of consumption, exacerbating our Nation's negative balance of trade.

(3) The Persian Gulf War commands attention to the fact that over 25 percent of America's gross oil imports are shipped from the Persian Gulf, and this reliance is the achilles heel of our Nation's energy and economic security.

(4) In the United States, the transportation sector accounts for 63 percent of total oil consumption.

(5) The Office of Technology Assessment estimates that the United States could displace 555,000 barrels of oil per day in the transportation sector by utilizing alternative fuels like compressed natural gas, electric vehicles, traffic management systems, and by reducing the number of gas guzzling vehicles on the road.

(6) Natural gas is a clean burning, abundant, and inexpensive national resource that could displace oil consumption in 25 percent of the current fleet vehicle population over ten years, reducing imported oil by 240,000 barrels per day.

(7) The United States taxpayers have invested significant resources in the development of alternative transportation fuels, electric vehicles, and traffic technologies, at our Nation's laboratories, universities, and in private industry.

(8) Both American Government and industry have met great success in the utilization of existing natural gas and electric vehicle fleets.

(9) Encouraging government and industry to convert to the use of energy efficient, alternative transportation fleets complements our national goals of energy independence, clean air, reduced balance of trade, and technology transfer.

(10) The pace of improvement of clean and efficient alternative technologies is directly correlated to the level of investment in research and development.

(b) Therefore, the Senate finds that it is in the Nation's best interest to assist the market and accelerate the adoption of alternative non-oil transportation fuels, vehicles, and traffic management systems, and the Senate will readdress this position during consideration of the appropriate tax legislation.

SEC. 19108. NATIONAL SECURITY TAX SHIFT.—(a) FINDINGS.—The Senate finds that—

(1) Conservation must be at the heart of any effective long-term national energy strategy; and increasing the motor fuels tax would encourage Americans to purchase more fuel efficient vehicles, car pool, and use alternative forms of transportation.

(2) By encouraging conservation and the market for alternative fuels, increasing the motor fuels tax would reduce our reliance on imported oil, and would reduce the likelihood that American troops will need to be sent abroad to secure the free flow of oil.

(3) Increasing the motor fuels tax would reduce automobile pollution, and, in particular, would reduce the emission of carbon dioxide, a key "greenhouse" gas.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that as part of the Nation's Energy Strategy, the Senate Finance and House Ways and Means Committees should study the possibility of legislation to shift some amount of taxation from the income tax to the motor fuels tax to encourage conservation and alternative fuels: Provided, That: (1) the revenue generated by the increase in motor fuels tax is shifted to taxpayers in the form of income tax reductions so that the package is revenue-neutral, does not represent a net tax increase on the average American family, and is at least as progressive as the current tax code; (2) the tax shift does not become effective until the current recession is over; and (3) the tax shift is phased in gradually to allow consumers and industries to adjust.

SEC. 19109. STRATEGIC DIVERSIFICATION.—The Office of Barter within the United States Department of Commerce and the Interagency Group on Countertrade shall within six months from the date of enactment report to the President and the Congress on the feasibility of using barter, countertrade and other self-liquidating finance methods to facilitate the strategic diversification of United States oil imports through cooperation with the former Soviet Union in the development of their energy resources. The report shall consider among other relevant topics the feasibility of trading American grown food for Soviet produced oil, minerals or energy.

SEC. 19110. NRC FEES.—It is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) the provisions of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990 (Public Law 101-508, section 6101) that require the Nuclear Regulatory Commission to recover essentially 100 percent of its budget authority through the imposition of fees may have caused an unfair burden to be imposed on certain NRC licensees; and

(2) the Nuclear Regulatory Commission should review its policy for assessment of fees and recommend to the Congress whether there is any need for changes in existing law to prevent the placement of an unfair burden on certain NRC licensees, in particular those that hold licenses to operate federally owned research reactors used primarily for educational training and academic research purposes.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. D'AMATO:

S. 2247. A bill to amend the Department of Housing and Urban Development Act to prohibit the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development from making lump sum relocation assistance payments, except under certain circumstances; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

PROHIBITION OF CERTAIN LUMP SUM PAYMENTS

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, today I am pleased to introduce legislation that will put an end to needless waste of Federal dollars. What I am talking about is the abuse of taxpayer dollars by tenants who receive Federal housing relocation assistance. Instead of using money to find new homes, some tenants are using Government dollars to buy everything from microwave ovens to illicit drugs.

My legislation is designed to end this Government rip-off by closing the loophole that allows such waste and limiting the use of Federal dollars to their intended purpose—to provide needed housing.

Under this legislation, which was drafted in consultation with Department of Housing and Urban Development Secretary Jack Kemp, lump sum relocation assistance payments would be prohibited for any displaced residential tenant except where necessary to cover moving expenses or a down payment on the purchase of a home.

Current law allows lump sum payments to individuals who are being displaced from Government housing, but these payments for relocation assistance should be limited to their original purpose only—and that is to cover the cost of moving and to find a suitable new home.

In no way will my legislation compromise the protection for displaced individuals, nor will it cut benefits, nor does it impede local control of the process. Relocated tenants will continue to receive their benefits in a fiscally responsible manner. It simply eliminates the opportunity for scarce Federal housing dollars to go for non-Federal housing purposes.

The need for this type of legislation is overwhelming. In 1987, 57 tenants of Mulberry Square housing complex received a total of $714,921 in relocation assistance because the structure was being torn down. On the surface, this was a perfect reason why we have a Federal relocation assistance program. But what happened is a classic example of Government gone wrong.

Lump sum payments as large as $27,984 were issued to Mulberry Square tenants with no strings attached. Tenants did not have to pay taxes on the cash payments. There was no oversight to ensure that this money was used for housing purposes and often no counseling to assist tenants with those decisions. As a result, the money was squandered. Tenants bought microwave ovens, Nintendo games, stereos, and television sets. One women spent $5,000—five thousand Federal dollars allocated to help find her a new home—for miscellaneous Christman gifts.

Another woman received $20,000, promptly skipped out on her landlord, and was arrested a month later on drug possession charges. She told the court she was too poor to provide her own attorney, so the court provided one—at taxpayer expense.

In addition, some of these tenants manipulated the rules and hired lawyers, again paid for at taxpayer expense, to squeeze the maximum amount out of the relocation assistance program. And now, some of them want to get back into federally subsidized housing.

Mulberry Square is a classic example of why people are fed up with the Federal Government. While the relocation assistance program has good intentions, it is high time that we close the loopholes and utilize the funding for this program for its original purpose.

It is inconceivable to think how many millions of dollars may have been lost nationwide under this lump sum payment option. This legislation will prevent these types of abuses, not only in New York but across the Nation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill and an article from the Syracuse Herald Journal dated February 2, 1992, be included in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2247

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. PROHIBITION OF LUMP SUM PAYMENTS.

The Department of Housing and Urban Development Act (42 U.S.C. 3531 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"PROHIBITION OF LUMP SUM PAYMENTS

"SEC. 14. In providing relocation assistance in connection with any program administered by the Department of Housing and Urban Development, the Secretary may not make lump sum payments to any displaced residential tenant, except where necessary to cover—

"(1) moving expenses;

"(2) a down payment on the purchase of a replacement residence, including a condominium unit or membership in a cooperative housing association; or

"(3) any incidental expenses related to paragraph (1) or (2).".

One Legacy of Mulberry Square: On Welfare With $27,000 in Hand

(By Dan McGuire and Jon Craig)

Regina Poole cashed the check, put thousands of dollars into her pocket and walked out of a Syracuse bank.

"My legs were shaking," she remembers.

Back at her apartment in a dilapidated complex for the poor, her children watched as she yelled and threw the cash into the air. Green bills, given to her by the government, fell like rain that day in 1987.

"This is our money?" one of her children asked.

"Yeah," Poole said.

The children, too, threw the money to the ceiling.

"And then I said, 'We're all going shopping,'" Poole said.

They bought a Nintendo set, stereos, microwave ovens, two sets of living room furniture, paintings, appliances and closets-full of clothes. Poole spent "100 and something for pump-em-up sneakers" for her son. She bought her mother a microwave oven and a videocassette recorder. She put $100 in her mother's purse and told her to have fun.

No more Salvation Army clothes. No more Christmases with just a tree and a nice dinner. She spent $5,000 that Christmas.

She was given $27,984 because she had to move from the Mulberry Square housing complex, which was being torn down. The government gave $714,921 to 57 Mulberry tenants in 1987. They were free to spend the money any way they liked. They didn't have to pay taxes on it. They didn't have to get off welfare. Thirteen of the people are now waiting to get back into subsidized housing.

The law that made this happen is still on the books.

This is the story of how the government threw money away as it tried to fulfill its obligation to the poor, and how good intentions led to the expectation that government's deep pockets can always be tapped.

The recipients say they deserved the money because Mulberry was run-down and living there was difficult. In 1990, when Mayor Thomas Young speculated on tearing down the Hilltop housing project, many Hilltop tenants wondered, "Where's our Mulberry money?"

"This one was a wide-open door, a totally open barn door," said Fred Murphy, executive director of the Syracuse Housing Authority, which wrote the checks. "It's an extremely naive policy written by the feds. It shows the people who wrote it have no street smarts at all."

Some Mulberry tenants manipulated federal rules to try to get the most money possible. Some were helped by lawyers paid by the taxpayers.

This is about what happened to poor people who suddenly had thousands of dollars. Some are working. But many, like Poole, remain on welfare, and some want more government aid. Some used the money to buy houses or for an education. Some bought drugs. Some bought plenty of things which won't last.

The government made no attempt to advise the people how they could use the windfall to improve their lives or pull themselves permanently out of poverty.

Governments at most levels are rethinking how much money to give the poor. New Jersey has stopped paying more to welfare mothers who have more children. California trimmed across the board. Michigan stopped benefits to healthy, single people.

The poor flock to New York for some of the highest payments in the nation. State lawmakers are looking at reducing medical benefits and limiting payments to single people who can work.

Anti-poverty programs consume money faster than the rate of inflation. Although trillions of dollars have been spent, the poverty level has changed little. In 1965, at the start of the War on Poverty, 17.3 percent of the population was below the poverty line. In 1990, it was 13.5 percent.

The federal government in fiscal 1991 spent $284 billion fighting poverty, 21 percent of its budget, more than defense. President Bush says he wants reforms.

"Welfare was never meant to be a lifestyle," Bush said in his State of the Union speech Tuesday. "It was never meant to be a habit. It was never supposed to be passed on from generation to generation like a legacy."

One federal program will spend $17.6 billion this fiscal year to provide a rent subsidy to 4.4 million families. It's in addition to the shelter subsidy included in welfare payments.

The number of people who can receive the rental subsidy—worth about $4,000 a year—is limited. In Syracuse, about 4,900 families receive it and about the same number are waiting. A family of four must make less than about $18,000 to qualify. Through the Section 8 program or public housing, people spend 30 percent of their income in rent. The government pays the difference between their payment and a market rent.

Mulberry Square tenants were getting that subsidy. The complex opened in 1968—381 apartments jammed between South Townsend, South State, East Adams and East Taylor streets in downtown Syracuse. It was owned by private companies. Taxpayers paid for most of it.

Crime, shoddy maintenance, mismanagement, abusive tenants and their visitors and poor design turned the project to a shambles. In 1986, SHA bought it and planned to tear it down and put up fewer, better apartments.

Mulberry tenants had to move. Federal law said they had to be paid the difference between their current rent and their new rent multiplied by 48. That's enough to cover their new rent for four years. Murphy hoped people would buy homes and stabilize their lives.

Many rejected SHA's offers of money and apartments. Working with the Rev. Harvey Pinyoun of Plymouth Congregational Church downtown, tenant leaders held regular news conferences to castigate SHA. And with lawyers from Legal Services of Central New York—paid for by taxpayers—they fought SHA for more money.

SHA ended up paying out almost twice what it expected. It had received the money years earlier selling land to the federal government for Interstate 81.

Because of the payouts, SHA dropped its ideas for such things as playgrounds, better security and landscaping at Langston McKinney Manor, the 75-unit apartment complex that replaced Mulberry.

The checks were so large because the difference between what people were paying at Mulberry and what they needed for unsubsidized housing was so large. The Mulberry rent was small because it was subsidized and because Mulberry's managers, before the housing authority took over, allowed tenants to pay less than they should have. The rent that people needed outside Mulberry was determined by Elijah Huling, a Syracuse University associate law professor and Baldwinsville village justice who arbitrated the SHA-tenant disputes.

Huling said he arrived at the figures using government data and his own research. The law requires people receive a payment to rent housing equal to what they were leaving. Huling said he couldn't set payments according to his guess as to how people may spend the money.

Here are the stories of several families who received some of the biggest checks:

REGINA POOLE

Poole paid $69 a month for rent and utilities at Mulberry. When she had to move, SHA found her private apartments renting for $375 and $430. She wanted one for $700. Huling said Poole would need $652 a month for rent and utilities.

Poole's $27,984 was the most any Mulberry tenant received. She was the last to leave the complex.

"We deserved the money," she said. "We put up with the roaches, the mice, the light switches broken, the ceilings caved in, the snow coming in from the windows. Every superintendent they had running that place did a bad job. . . . We needed a good start to move someplace else."

Poole was sometimes on welfare at Mulberry, sometimes working at the Veterans Administration Medical Center in Syracuse or at the city school district. She broke her leg badly several years ago and was unable to work for a long time.

The Mulberry money helped with a payment on a mobile home north of Watertown. It's stuffed with the goods she bought—a television, a reel-to-reel tape, large stereo speakers. One of her living room sets is in storage. Poole lives in the mobile home with her fiance, a soldier at Fort Drum.

She said she doesn't want to marry him yet because she would lose her welfare check. She plans to move the mobile home to the Syracuse area next month, marry and get off welfare. She wants a job working with children or old people.

SARAH AND CLINTON HILL

The Hills used their $18,812 payment for a house at 160 Monticello Drive North in Syracuse's Valley neighborhood.

"It helped a great deal," said Clinton Hill. "No new car, no new clothes. We just paid some bills and came right in" to the house.

"Some people jumped to get the money and run. Some people just didn't stop and think and just used it up in the wrong way," he said. "They didn't have the counseling. They just took the money and blew it. A lot of them misused it. We don't have a penny of it now, but it got us started where we wanted to be."

He's a machinist at Crucible Specialty Metals. Sarah Hill is a typist in Onondaga County's Child Support Division of the Social Services Department.

"Getting that kind of money is scary if you never had that kind of money before," she said. "Some of them were afraid of it. They didn't want that kind of responsibility. They should have set up some kind of counseling or doled the money out in small increments."

TINA SUBER

She was Tina Kellam when she lived in Mulberry. Now she and her husband, Michael Suber, live in Rochester where Michael Suber works for Eastman Kodak Co.

Tina Suber received $9,744 to move out. Her mother, Beatrice, who also moved to Rochester, received $5,760. Tina's father-in-law, Eugene Suber, received $4,080.

"I've known people who really did worse since they moved out of there," she said. "I don't think it was handled too well. A lot of people didn't do right with the money. They just spent it and didn't think about the future."

But she said she spent it well.

"Mulberry Square helped him (Michael) get through (Syracuse University)," she said.

GLENDA COOPER

Herald American reporters couldn't find Cooper, now 38. Court records tell a story.

At Mulberry, Cooper paid $225 for a three-bedroom apartment, utilities included. SHA offered her an apartment costing $502 a month with utilities. She refused and signed a lease for an apartment costing $752 with utilities. Huling ruled she needed $652 a month. Under the formula, she was given a check for $20,496.

Cooper skipped out on her landlord, a judgment shows. She owes him $1,411. She then rented an apartment in Syracuse for $375 a month without utilities. She didn't pay two months' rent and was evicted. She moved to another Syracuse apartment costing $350 a month, skipped some payments and owes several hundred dollars.

Cooper received her windfall check in September 1987. In November 1987 she was arrested and charged with a felony and a misdemeanor count of drug possession. In April 1988, she was arrested and charged with three drug felonies involving a quarter-ounce of cocaine.

She pleaded guilty in both cases. She was sent to prison for two months, put on probation and required to stay off drugs, get drug counseling and look for a job.

Three times she was arrested for violating those rules. One probation report said she had not looked for a job, had not gone to drug counseling, skipped meetings with her supervisor and had not told her supervisor she had moved. As a result, she was jailed for a year.

She told courts she was too poor to afford a lawyer to defend her on the drug charges, so the government provided one. It cost the taxpayers $350.

ROSE LAWSON

Lawson used her $26,976 check to buy a house at 310 Brookfield Road in Mattydale. She receives Supplemental Security Income, a government program that provides money to the elderly and disabled.

"I know how to manage money," she said. "My mother taught us. She had six children, and we always ate well. I knew the money was not going to get away from me. If you get a house, the money stays there. If you hold it in your hand, you keep pinching and pinching and pinching and then there's nothing left."

She is raising her grandchildren there and wants them far from the projects.

"I can't watch them 24 hours," she said. "What I wanted to do was put them so far away they'd never go back. That's what the money was about, my kids. I did it for them. I wanted better for them."

Lawson is a former president of the Mulberry Square tenants association. She had urged the tenants to pool their money and start a business. They didn't.

"I just got sick of them," she said. "No one wanted to do anything."

During the conflict between SHA and tenants, the word was to find the most expensive apartments possible, she said. She said she found one for $650 to maximize her check.

"There was a lot that weren't thinking," she said. "They went out and got cheap apartments on the South Side."

Lawson was paying about $60 a month rent at Mulberry. When SHA wanted to increase it, she quit welfare and got a job as a home health aide. The low pay kept her rent down. She said she survived on food stamps, Medicaid and a "guardian angel."

Lawson said the Mulberry tenants deserve the payment and more.

"They took their homes away from them, and they shouldn't have," she said." "They should have fixed the project up, but they destroyed it."

PAULA ADAMS

She was given $21,216.

She lives in an apartment near a high-crime area in Syracuse's East Side. The screens are ripped from windows and a door. The house needs paint. Wood is rotted.

Inside is a stereo system with four-foot-high speakers, a large Magnavox television, a new-looking sofa and a four-foot-long aquarium. During an interview, she sipped from a coffee cup that said. "I'm only here 'til I win the Lottery."

She remains on welfare. And she's one of 14 former Mulberry tenants—whose checks totaled $192,144—on the waiting list to get back into subsidized housing. Also on the waiting list is Rena Ausby, a former Mulberry tenant leader who was the spokeswoman against SHA in 1987.

Last year, Adams collected $4,228 more than the housing authority. She had sued in 1988, claiming she was hurt when a closet door fell on her back in her Mulberry apartment in 1987. Now she wants more.

"I want to pull Syracuse Housing into court again," she said. "We need to reopen this thing . . . I said I needed more money."

By Mr. DECONCINI:

S. 2248. A bill to guarantee comprehensive health care services to veterans and their families by ensuring entitlement and eligibility to a wide array of health care services, to make greater resources and funding available for the delivery of such service, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

AMERICAN VETERANS' HEALTH CARE REFORM ACT

• Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the American Veterans' Health Care Reform Act of 1992, the second of three bills of critical importance to our veteran community I will be introducing this month. The legislation I am introducing today at the request of the Disabled Americans Veterans will, I hope, expedite resolution of the most of the highly controversial issues surrounding the issue of health care eligibility. I applaud the Disabled American Veterans for the hard work they expended in drafting this comprehensive bill and look forward to working with them to restore sanity and fairness in eligibility determinations for veterans health care. This legislation would guarantee comprehensive health care services to veterans and their families by ensuring them entitlement and eligibility to a wide array of health care services and make greater resources and funding available for the delivery of these services.

As my colleagues have heard so forcefully from their constituents in recent months, health care in our Nation is in a state of severe crisis. In our country today, nearly 37 million Americans have no health care insurance and millions more are considered to be underinsured. For those fortunate enough to have health care coverage, the cost of this insurance is typically increasing at four to five times the annual rate of inflation. For many families, rising health care costs are creating severe financial problems and forcing them to choose between health care and food on their tables.

Perhaps no group has been affected more by this crisis than our Nation's veterans—those very same men and women whose names would appear on what President Bush called America's Rollcall of Honor during his recent State of Union Address. "It's a long rollcall," the President said, "all of the GI Joes and Janes, all the one's who fought faithfully for freedom, who hit the ground and sucked the dust and knew their share of horror."

Sadly, America's veterans continue to see their share of horror when it comes to getting timely, quality medical care from our Nation's Department of Veterans Affairs. Since fiscal year 1977, VA health care has been cut from 11.4 percent of the Federal budget to an estimated 6.4 percent in fiscal year 1992. Is this how a grateful nation should repay its debt to the men and women on America's rollcall of Honor? I, for one, don't think so.

It is apparent, Mr. President, that prior actions taken to improve VA health care delivery, to define eligibility criteria, to provide necessary funding, and to plan for the future have been isolated, shortsighted and inadequate. To rectify this situation and provide our Nation's veterans with a health care system befitting their sacrifices, I am pleased to introduce the American Veterans' Health Care Reform Act of 1992.

In proposing this significant legislation, I have attempted to consider the health care needs of veterans in context with the needs and imminent changes to America's health care system as a whole. A medical care system as large as the VA's cannot be separated from and, indeed, must be expected to contribute to, our Nation's total health care picture.

The centerpiece of this legislative proposal authorizes a core entitlement group consisting of service-connected disabled low-income and special-category veterans. This core group would be entitled to receive the full continuum of care provided by the VA health care system. Any veteran outside the core group would be eligible to receive care contingent upon their ability to offset costs through other Federal and private third-party reimbursements, direct payments, or purchased VA health benefit packages. This proposal also would require the VA to move from the traditional acute, disease model of care to a holistic approach, one that not only treats diseases and disabilities, but also focuses on health promotion and disease prevention.

Finally, Mr. President, this legislation calls for entitlement, nondiscriminatory congressional appropriations for the cost of care provided to the core eligible group. The amount of these funds would be strictly dependent upon how many veterans meet core group eligibility requirements and the cost of care provided to them. Administrative expenses, and the cost of care provided to the general eligibility group of veterans, would be discretionary and developed in consideration of the expected collections and reimbursements from Medicare, CHAMPUS, private insurance, VA buy-in benefits packages, and direct payments.

Mr. President, at the very least, I believe this legislation will serve to initiate meaningful debate on the direction that VA health care can and must take. Furthermore, I believe it represents a responsible plan of action to ensure that an independent VA will survive to serve the health care needs of veterans well into the 21st century. I also believe this legislation is compatible and will contribute significantly to the development of a sound national health care policy. For these reasons, I am introducing the Disabled American Veterans' "American Veterans' Health Care Reform Act of 1992" to guarantee comprehensive health care services to veterans and their families. I urge my colleagues to expedite its consideration.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of my bill together with a section-by-section summary be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2248

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCE TO ACT.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "American Veterans' Health Care Reform Act of 1992".

(b) REFERENCE TO ACT.—Except as otherwise specifically provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 38, United States Code.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds the following:

(1) The health care system currently available to veterans through plans administered primarily by the Department of Veterans Affairs (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "VA") makes a significant contribution to the health and welfare of veterans, despite years of inadequate funding for such system and the unique needs of the veteran population.

(2) Through advanced and specialized research and treatment, the veterans' health case system has greatly enhanced broader health care research and treatment of a range of illnesses, disabilities, and diseases affecting not only veterans, but the general population as well, including spinal cord injuries, post-traumatic stress disorders, blindness, and tuberculosis.

(3) A viable, cost-effective health care system for veterans must move away from the current provision of disjointed services and toward provision of a continuum of comprehensive health care.

(4) Necessary and realistic reforms are essential to guarantee improved veteran access to health care, systems restructuring, and enhanced quality of health care. The VA will be better prepared to carry out such reforms if allowed to collect, retain, and use funds in the VA Medical-Care Cost Recovery Fund for such purpose.

(5) Because of barriers resulting from statutory and administrative eligibility restrictions, demographics, the variable range of available health services, and inadequate funding, many eligible veterans are denied the adequate, comprehensive health care implicitly promised them in connection with their military service to our Nation.

(6) Demographic patterns indicate that, by the year 2010, the number of veterans 75 years of age and older will nearly triple, the type of health care services needed by veterans will have changed significantly, and substantial number of veterans will have migrated to the Sunbelt States. Consequently, health care resource planning and allocation must be responsive to these variables to ensure that access to such resources is concomitant with the health care needs of our veteran population.

(7) Given the health care needs of veterans and the cost of any health care system, it is reasonable public policy that entitled veterans receive necessary health care as an entitlement and that other veterans receive health care, on a discretionary basis, under terms and conditions that provide for payment or reimbursement for services rendered.

(8) Any comprehensive national health care proposal, including any national health insurance proposal, should address reforms in the veterans' health care system.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF PROPOSED AMERICAN VETERANS' HEALTH CARE REFORM ACT OF 1992

Purpose: This is a bill to guarantee comprehensive health care services to veterans and their families by ensuring entitlement and eligibility to a wide of health care services, to make greater resources and funding available for the delivery of such services, and for other purposes.

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCE TO ACT

Establishes that the legislation will be referred to as the "American Veterans' Health Care Reform Act of 1992." The bill would primarily amend Chapter 17 of Title 38 of the United States Code.

SECTION 2. FINDINGS

Recognizes eight basic findings relative to veterans' health care on which the Act is premised and/or which it is intended to remedy. These findings essentially focus on three areas of consideration:

1. Veterans should be afforded health care services by the VA because of their service to the Nation and the concomitant implicit guarantee that they will be able to access and receive that health care.

2. Not withstanding that promise, the veterans' health care system is inadequate to meet their needs. Services are restricted without appropriate consideration of medical need or currency and funding of the system is significantly deficient.

3. There is a need for reforms to the veterans' health care system that will fulfull the Nation's promise to them by providing comprehensive health care services that are attendant to the current and predicted demographic and geographic patterns of veterans. In establishing these reforms the valuable role of the veterans' health care system in national health care reform must be considered.

SECTION 3. ACCESS TO COMPREHENSIVE HEALTH CARE FOR VETERANS AND THEIR SURVIVORS AND DEPENDENTS

Categories of Veterans

Core-Entitled Veterans—including all service-connected veterans, certain low income veterans, former prisoners of war, and additional limited categories of veterans.

Other Eligible Veterans (Non-Core Entitled Veterans)—including all other veterans not part of the core-entitled category the care of whom is established as discretionary.

Access and Services

Core-entitled veterans shall be entitled to the full continuum of medically-necessary health care provided by/through the VA. This would include, without limitation: inpatient, outpatient, nursing home care (including adult day care), domiciliary care, home health services, respite care, collateral health care and dental care services, readjustment counseling, the provision of therapeutic and rehabilitative devices, seeing eye dogs, and the repair of prosthetic and other appliances, alcohol and drug treatment, and necessary medications.

Other non-core entitled veterans would be eligible for all services, at the discretion of the Secretary, without statutorily prescribed limitations, but with the ability to offset the cost of the care received.

Readjustment counseling services would be provided without regard to the period of active duty service.

SECTION 4. PREVENTIVE HEALTH CARE

Adds a new section formally establishing that preventive health care services would be among the services available to veterans. These services are essential to a comprehensive health care system and can be expected to substantially reduce the longer range costs of health care to veterans and improve their quality of life. Further, service-connected conditions (e.g., amputations), and life-style and genetic factors particularly prevalent among the veteran population (e.g., smoking rates, hypertension rates) suggest the need for these services to be readily available as an entitlement for the core-entitled veterans and contingent on ability to offset cost for non-core entitled veterans.

The full range of screening, treatment, and educational services would be available and most of these services are delineated in this section, including smoking cessation services, hypertension and colo-rectal and prostate screening, nutritional education, and immunizations.

SECTION 5. HEALTH SERVICES FOR NON-CORE ENTITLED VETERANS AND OTHER ELIGIBLE INDIVIDUALS

Adds a new section that would require the VA to put into continuing effect a managed care plan for the delivery of health care services to any non-core entitled veteran and to the survivors and dependents of any veteran. The plan would have to be in effect within 2 years of enactment of the legislation.

Provides that the VA offer various packages reflecting different combinations of services and ranges of premiums that are structured so as to be affordable to potential purchasers. In order to provide an opportunity to constituent groups to consider the degree of the "affordability" the Secretary would determine the premiums by regulation.

SECTION 6. PAYMENT FOR SERVICES

Adds a new section that prescribes the methods of payment that could be used to offset the costs of services to non-core entitled veterans and to survivors and dependents of any veteran.

Methods of payment would include:

Direct out-of-pocket payment;

Medicare reimbursement;

Medicare reimbursement;

Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services (CHAMPUS) reimbursement;

VA Managed Care Plan fund;

Private health insurance reimbursement;

Any combination of these.

SECTION 7. APPROPRIATIONS; COST RECOVERY; AND SEQUESTRATION

Establishes that funds for the provision of health care services to core-entitled veterans, inclusive of administrative costs associated with that care, would be appropriated as a non-discretionary entitlement exempt from sequestration, beginning in Fiscal Year 1993.

Further, provides that the mandatory, entitlement appropriation would take into account costs associated with quality management and assurance functions.

Administrative costs related to the non-mandatory services provided by VA to/for other than the core-entitled veterans would be separately appropriated and separately accounted for and stated in the President's budget requests.

Establishes the authority of VA to collect reimbursements from Medicare and Medicaid for the treatment of veterans, survivors, and dependents eligible under those programs.

Provides that the VA would have the authority to use any funds deposited in the Medical Care Cost Recovery Fund to provide health care benefits to eligible persons, to operate the VA health care system, and to enhance the quality of care and the delivery systems providing health care to veterans.

The President's budget requests for the VA would have to be developed without consideration of the collected/reimbursed amounts deposited into the Medical Care Cost Recovery Fund.

SECTION 8. ANNUAL REPORTS

Requires the VA to report to the House and Senate Veterans' Affairs Committees by January 15 of each fiscal year on the impact of the effected reforms. Specifically, the report would include:

Cost information and cost changes between the reformed system and the system of health care delivery prior to reforms;

Current and former information on the demographics of veterans, and of their access and use of the health care system;

Findings and conclusions as to effectiveness of reforms in terms of access, medical advantages, and cost;

Plans for legislative or regulatory actions necessary to the continued effectuation of the reforms.

Congressionally-chartered veterans' organizations would be given the opportunity to provide comments which the VA would consider and include in the reports.

SECTION 9. EFFECTIVE DATE

Provides for implementation of most reforms by the beginning of the first fiscal year occurring after enactment.•

By Mr. KERRY (for himself and Mr. KENNEDY):

S. 2249. A bill to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act to provide for improvement of the quality of Boston Harbor and adjacent waters; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

BOSTON HARBOR CLEANUP

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation designed to help further the Boston Harbor cleanup. This legislation which I am introducing with Senator KENNEDY will authorize a major new Federal funding commitment for the cleanup of Boston Harbor, one of America's dirtiest as well as historic coastal water bodies.

Every day, over 500 million gallons of sewage is discharged into the harbor resulting in one of the most serious coastal water quality problems in this country. This pollution is a major continuing threat to water activities such as fishing, swimming, and boating and to other uses that provide a boost to the Boston area's economy. It continues to devastate the health of marine life but most importantly the health of the citizens of the Boston area are at risk.

While discharge of sewage sludge was recently halted, continuing discharge of wastewater that has not received secondary treatment required by the Federal Clean Water Act remains a serious environmental problem. A recent report by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration further substantiates the harbor's severe water quality problems.

But, if public health and user benefits of harbor cleanup are high, so are the costs. The total capital program of the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority [MWRA], which is charged with harbor cleanup, is $6.3 billion for both water supply and sewage treatment. Of that amount, $4.2 billion, in 1992 dollars, is for the wastewater capital program.

But, that is only part of the cost Boston area ratepayers will pay. While the total project cost will be $5.8 billion in inflated dollars by the time this project is finished, if the MWRA borrows this $5.8 billion in order to meet requirements of the Federal Clean Water Act as appears today to be its only option, it will cost Boston area ratepayers a staggering $15.3 billion, including debt service, to repay the debt over the next 30 years.

Mr. President, let me repeat these numbers: $4.2 billion at today's prices becomes $5.8 billion by the time this project is completed which becomes $15.3 billion when it is financed over the next 30 years. This is by far the most costly public works program in the history of New England.

MWRA has received $179 million in Federal grant funding since 1987. This means that over 95 percent of the wastewater capital program will be locally funded if no additional grant funding is provided by Congress.

I am pleased that the administration has recognized the need for Federal funding to assist the ratepayers of Massachusetts in meeting this massive federally mandated and federally supervised wastewater construction program for Boston Harbor. And, while I appreciate the $100 million requested in the President's budget, it just begins to scratch the surface.

Given the Federal mandate, given the history of 75 percent or 55 percent Federal matching grants for similar projects in the past in other localities across the Nation, given the extraordinary size and crushing rate burden associated with this project, it is only fair, reasonable, and just for the Federal Government to assume a significantly larger share of the financial burden than is currently expected.

MWRA area residents will continue to experience rate shock in undertaking this important environmental program. For instance, in fiscal year 1992, MWRA households will pay $168 for water and $297 for wastewater for a total of $465, an increase of 31 percent over the previous year. These ratepayers are expected to be subjected to an additional 25 percent increase in fiscal 1993 so they will be paying $177 for water and $408 for wastewater for a total of $585.

MWRA rates for fiscal year 1998 are projected to be $350 for water and $845 for wastewater for a total of $1,195, an average annual increase of 20 percent, perhaps the fastest growing rates in the country.

Rates for Boston residents alone already rank third highest in rates among the 25 largest metropolitan areas in the United States. Even with significantly increased Federal help they will remain the highest or among the highest in the country; without it, our families will have the unchallenged if dubious distinction of paying more for sewage disposal than anyone else in any major metropolitan area of the United States.

The public health and environmental benefits in achieving Federal sewage treatment requirements are obvious. In addition, as one of the largest public works projects in New England, it will have significant economic benefits to Boston and the region.

The project will provide nearly $3 billion to the Boston economy and nearly 1,500 construction jobs in the average year of construction. This is vitally important to an area hard hit by the current recession.

The project will also result in as much as $150 million in tax revenues to the Commonwealth. Upon completion, it will allow removal, or avoidance of, any development moratoria related to inadequate sewage treatment facilities.

The Boston Harbor wastewater construction project is underway and on schedule. Between July 1, 1992, and June 30, 1993, it is scheduled to spend $644 million on new sewage treatment facilities alone at the Deer Island site. This amount does not include other system improvements and maintenance.

The project is currently one of the largest public works projects in New England. Its economic impact in generating much needed employment is significant. Plans are ready and additional Federal funding could be put to use this year as an important element in the Nation's effort to expand employment opportunities.

In addition to grant funding, in December of last year, MWRA received $73.1 million in loans from the Commonwealth's State revolving fund established under title VI of the Clean Water Act. However, since MWRA's own revenue bonds have a high rating, the SRF loans are expected to provide only minimal relief to the authority's ratepayers.

The $179 million in grant funding provided to the MWRA project to date is only 3 percent of total project costs. The rest will be shouldered by local ratepayers.

As summarized by the MWRA, the importance of continued Federal grant funding is clear:

> For every $1 million MWRA receives in a grant, it avoids approximately $97,900 in annual debt service costs at the January 1990 interest rate of 7.7%, or a total of $2.9 million over the term of the borrowing. For every $1 million the Authority receives as a loan, it pays approximately $60,000 in annual debt service or a total of $1.2 million over the term of the borrowing. The net savings is $1.7 million on each $1 million issued.

Mr. President, what this means is that for every $100 million in Federal grant funding, $15 is provided to households each year in rate relief for a total of $450 over the 30-year term of MWRA bonds. The $1 billion that would be authorized by this bill, which I am introducing today, would mean $150 in savings to the average household each year for a total of $4,500 over the 30-year life of MWRA bonds.

The legislation introduced today would authorize the appropriation of $1 billion over 5 years for the construction of wastewater facilities serving MWRA and Boston area households comprised of nearly 2.6 million persons and 5,500 businesses and industries. These funds would be used by MWRA to meet federally mandated secondary treatment requirements under a schedule previously ordered by the U.S. district court.

Even in combination with the $179 million provided by Congress to date, this amount would bring the Federal share of the Boston Harbor project to approximately 20 percent of total costs, a far cry from the 75-percent Federal matching funds authorized for projects in the original Clean Water Act of 1972 or 55 percent for certain projects initiated after 1984.

Many other metropolitan areas in this country have complied with the Clean Water Act with the significant assistance of these higher levels of Federal grant funding previously available. It is only fair and reasonable for the Federal Government to recognize its responsibility and expand its commitment to the Boston Harbor project. This bill enables that to happen. In so doing, this commitment would assist in meeting this important Federal mandate while at the same time adding to the national effort needed to stimulate economic development and jobs. In the long run, this bill will save Massachusetts ratepayers thousands of dollars for each family—dollars that could be better used to educate their children and meet a score of other important family financial burdens, instead of going primarily to pay some wealthy bond buyers rent on their money.

Mr. President, it isn't every day that President Bush and the Massachusetts congressional delegation agree on a priority matter to the people of our State. However, the last two budgets submitted by the President have recognized the urgent environmental need and the clear Federal responsibility to assist in the cleanup of Boston Harbor. I applaud the President for his actions, but today urge him and my colleagues in Congress to recognize that what is really necessary and fair is a much more serious and a multiyear commitment to the cleanup of the historic Boston Harbor. We are not asking for the 75-percent Federal share of such costs that was provided for similar projects in the past, or even the 55-percent that was available for such projects at other times. No, Mr. President, we are simply asking that roughly 20 percent of this federally required, federally supervised cleanup be carried by the Federal Government, so that hard-pressed Massachusetts ratepayers will not be left to tote this extraordinary load by themselves.

Therefore, Mr. President, I hope that the Congress will provide expeditious and favorable consideration of this proposal, recognizing the costs and environmental benefits, as well as the need to generate new jobs in this time of economic hardship.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2249

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. BOSTON HARBOR.

Title V of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act of 1972, as amended, is amended—

(1) by redesignating section 519 as section 520; and

(2) by inserting after section 518 the following new section:

"BOSTON HARBOR AND ADJACENT WATERS"

"SEC. 519. (a) The Administrator shall establish a grant program to make grants to the State of Massachusetts for use by the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority for constructing wastewater treatment works for the areas served by the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority.

"(b) The Federal share of any construction projects described in subsection (a) of this section shall not exceed 75 percent of the cost of construction of the wastewater treatment work.

"(c)(1) For the purposes of carrying out the grant program under this section, there are authorized to be appropriated for each of the fiscal years 1992, 1993, 1994, 1995, and 1996 an amount equal to $200,000,000.

"(2) The amounts described in paragraph (1) shall remain available until expended.

"(3) The amounts described in paragraph (1) shall be authorized to be appropriated in addition to any other amounts authorized to be appropriated under title II or IV of this Act.".

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, it is a privilege for me to join with my colleague from Massachusetts, Senator KERRY, in cosponsoring legislation to provide continued and expanded Federal assistance for the cleanup of sewage discharged into Boston Harbor.

Increased Federal aid is vital to ease the crushing burden on ratepayers in Massachusetts. We must restore Boston Harbor for the sake of the environment, public health, and recreation, but we also have to recognize the economic pain that high rates are imposing on families in the Boston area, and provide a greater Federal contribution to the cleanup effort.

This important legislation addresses twin national objectives: environmental restoration and economic development. I urge its prompt consideration in this difficult economic time.

The water quality problems in Boston Harbor are well known. They garnered national attention when the President highlighted them during his last campaign. The Boston area is one of only a handful of metropolitan areas not yet meeting Federal sewage treatment requirements.

The cleanup effort is well underway now. The discharge of sewage sludge to the harbor was ended on December 24 of last year, marking an important milestone in the cleanup effort. But a great deal remains to be done to fulfill the requirements spelled out by Congress and by the Federal court order governing the cleanup project.

To date, the Federal Government has focused attention on the cleanup of the Harbor, but the resources have not been provided at levels comparable to what other cities recieved in the past 20 years.

The cost of the Boston Harbor cleanup will be enormous. The total capital program of the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority, the public agency charged with providing water supply and sewage treatment services to the 60 communities in the greater Boston area, is $7.3 billion for water supply and wastewater treatment including combined sewer overflows. The wastewater program alone is $4.2 billion in current dollars and $5.8 billion when inflation is considered. If MWRA must borrow this $5.8 billion, it will cost ratepayers $15.3 billion to repay the debt over the next 30 years.

Boston Harbor serves a regional population of over 2.6 million persons plus visitors to the Boston area. Approximately 5,500 businesses are also served by MWRA. The harbor and nearby bays are well known for commercial fishing and recreation. Massachusetts Bay has been recognized as an estuary of national significance and the adjacent Stellwagen Bank is expected to receive designation soon as a National Marine Sanctuary. Restoring Boston Harbor is essential to the preservation of these environmentally sensitive areas.

The cleanup will have important economic, as well as environmental benefits. A study of the project by Cambridge Systematics, Inc., for MWRA predicts that during the 1990's, the project will provide approximately $3 billion to the local Boston economy alone, or $2 for every $1 spent. Approximately 1,500 jobs will be created in the average construction year, and nearly $150 million will be realized in tax revenue by the Commonwealth.

Environmental protection offers one of the best opportunities to stimulate our economy and create jobs. In the economic stimulus legislation I introduced at the beginning of this session, $4.4 billion in additional funds would be provided for fiscal year 1992 for wastewater construction projects across the country under the Clean Water Act, and another $1.5 billion under the Farmers Home Administration water and wastewater programs. This is a small investment, considering the level of unmet wastewater treatment needs reported by the Environmental Protection Agency and groups such as the Association of State and Interstate Water Pollution Control Administrators.

In the Boston area, there is no doubt that additional Federal funds can be put to work immediately. MWRA now has plans ready that total $644 million for wastewater construction between July of this year and June 1993. Additional significant amounts will be spent in the 1993–94 time frame.

There is another important reason why this legislation should be approved. As it now stands, without any additional Federal funding. Boston area ratepayers will shoulder over 95 percent of the cost of meeting Federal Clean Water Act requirements.

As a result, water and sewer rates will continue to skyrocket in the coming decade. Rates for the average household in the Boston area in 1992 will be $168 for water and $297 for wastewater, for a total of $465, an increase of 31 percent over 1991. And these rates are expected to jump by an additional 25 percent in 1993.

By 1998, MRWA projects that the average household will pay $350 for water and $845 for wastewater, for a total of $1,195 in that year. We are talking about an average annual increase of nearly 20 percent and a total jump of 640 percent between 1986 and 1998. Other metropolitan areas are unlikely to have rate growth at anywhere near this level.

To date, the Boston Harbor project has received $179 million in Federal grants. I am pleased that the administration has recently seen the light, and has included funding for Boston Harbor in its fiscal year 1992 and fiscal year 1993 budget proposals, but the amounts are clearly insufficient.

The project has also received $73 million in a loan from the State Revolving Fund, financed under title VI of the Clean Water Act. This SRF loan, at a 1.8 percent interest rate, is likely to be a one-time occurrence, because it is significantly below market interest rates. No SRF can loan below-market rates for long and remain a revolving fund.

In addition, the amount of unmet wastewater construction needs throughout Massachusetts, is great, and the Commonwealth's fiscal circumstances prevent contributions above the minimum State match. Finally, MWRA's own bonds enjoy a higher rating than the Commonwealth's, and the State Revolving Fund. These combined factors mean that grant funding, not the SRF, is the primary source of real relief to ratepayers in the Boston area.

This legislation will authorize $1 billion in Federal funds under the Clean Water Act for Boston Harbor, to construct wastewater treatment facilities for sewage discharged by MWRA. The funds to be administered by the Environmental Protection Agency at a Federal share of not more than 75 percent will remain available until expended. This formulation parallels what Congress approved for Boston Harbor in 1987.

Most metropolitan areas received significant grants under a similar Federal/State match formula during the 1970's and early 1980's. At that time, Boston was determining the appropriate level of sewage treatment under the act's provisions on ocean discharges. Once this determination was made, MWRA began design and construction of the federally-mandated treatment facilities.

The $1 billion authorized by this bill, in addition to the $179 million already appropriated by Congress, represents approximately 20 percent of the wastewater project cost of $5.8 billion, adjusted for inflation. This amount is substantially less than the 75 percent funding enjoyed by other communities or even the 55 percent funding provided to projects initiated after 1984.

While this legislation will not put Boston on an equal footing with other cities, it is a reasonable response to the enormous rate increases that will face Boston families throughout this decade, as MWRA works to bring the harbor into compliance with Federal requirements.

I urge prompt and favorable consideration of this bill, in order to provide much-needed assistance to Boston area ratepayers, to create jobs, and to ensure that the clean up of Boston Harbor proceeds in a thorough and effective way.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 93—RELATIVE TO PROPOSED ARMS SALES TO ARAB COUNTRIES

Mr. SEYMOUR (for himself and Mr. DECONCINI) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. CON. RES. 93

Whereas the United Nations Partition Plan of 1947 created national homelands in Palestine for both the Arab and Jewish residents of the region;

Whereas, although the State of Israel accepted this territorial division, a coalition of Arab states rejected the Partition Plan and initiated an armed conflict to eliminate the Jewish homeland;

Whereas the joint settlement ending the Arab-Israeli war of 1948 did not include formal recognition of the sovereignty of the State of Israel by any Arab government;

Whereas the Charter of the United Nations identifies the concept of sovereignty as a basic and inviolable right of all nations;

Whereas every government in the history of the State of Israel has adopted as a formal policy the willingness to negotiate all political and economic disagreements with any Arab party that recognizes unconditionally the sovereignty of the Jewish homeland; and

Whereas the failure of every Arab nation (other than Egypt) to recognize the sovereignty of Israel is a principle cause of the proliferation of offensive military weaponry and the absence of a comprehensive peace agreement in the Middle East: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) formal diplomatic recognition of the State of Israel by the Arab nations of the Middle East should occur without condition; and

(2) the President should withhold the submission to the Congress of any proposed sale of offensive military weaponry under section 36(b)(1) of the Arms Export Control Act (other than weaponry that may be required under emergency conditions) to any Arab nation of the Middle East until such nation establishes diplomatic relations with the State of Israel.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Senate shall transmit a copy of this concurrent resolution to the President.

• Mr. SEYMOUR. Mr. President, I rise this morning to submit a concurrent resolution on behalf of myself and Senator DECONCINI expressing the sense of the Congress that the President should withhold the sale of offensive military weaponry to Arab governments refusing to establish diplomatic relations with the State of Israel.

Recent developments such as the January 6 vote by the United Nations Security Council condemning the Shamir government for its plans to discipline 12 Palestinian agitators have obscured the reality that every Arab nation with the exception of one remains in a state of war with the Israeli people.

This grim factor—not the fate of the Palestinians or the Spartan Israeli settlements on the West Bank—poses the greatest obstacle to an enduring peace agreement in the Middle East.

Furthermore, during a time when the United States has repeatedly expressed its concern about the worldwide proliferation of offensive weapons, we cannot lose sight of the fact that the Arab world's refusal to accept the sovereignty of Israel stands as the major reason for the acquisition of long-range ballistic missiles by countries such as Libya, Syria, and Iraq.

If the President announces that he will refrain from initiating major arms sales to aggressive Arab powers, they might realize the futility of rejecting America's only democratic ally in the region.

Under these circumstances, the Israelis would have the opportunity to act upon their 40-year-old policy of negotiating all outstanding grievances with their neighbors if only the Arab States renounced their desire to destroy the Jewish homeland.

This resolution, therefore, gives all of the parties to the Arab-Israeli conflict an incentive for peace.

It takes the spotlight off the frequently hypocritical and one-sided actions of the United Nations and encourages diplomats from both sides to seriously address the deep-seated political conflicts that have haunted the Middle East for more than four decades.

During this time of hope generated by the ongoing regional peace negotiations, Congress could not make a more appropriate statement of policy than the one enunciated by this resolution. As a result, I urge the Senate to consider and adopt this vital measure at the earliest possible time.•

SENATE RESOLUTION 260—OPPOSING THE TAXATION OF CASH BUILDUP IN LIFE INSURANCE ANNUITIES

Mr. KASTEN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

S. RES. 260

Whereas the U.S. savings rate is among the lowest in the industrialized world;

Whereas life insurance annuities are an important savings vehicle for Americans;

Whereas life insurance annuities are an important means of providing for retirement;

Whereas the proposed tax on annuities would result in the loss of substantial long-term capital investment;

Whereas a tax on the cash value of annuities would eliminate annuities as an attractive investment, saving, and retirement vehicle;

Whereas the proposed tax on annuities would harm the insurance industry, an important source of investment in the economy and a source of jobs for millions of Americans: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Congress shall oppose any attempt to increase taxes on life insurance annuities.

• Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I rise today to express my strong opposition to the administration's proposal to tax the cash buildup in life insurance annuities. I will aggressively oppose its inclusion in any tax or budget measure.

Taxing annuities in the manner proposed would result in the loss of substantial long-term capital investment. Life insurance annuities are an important program of saving and investment for Americans. Annuities provide retirement security and help to boost our Nation's low savings rate. It makes absolutely no sense that the Government would want to eliminate such an attractive and efficient private-sector insurance and retirement program. Hundreds of my constituents in Wisconsin have contacted me to express their dismay at this proposal.

The administration's proposal would harm American insurance companies, an industry that employs millions of Americans. Annuity sales are the source of substantial proportion of new business. The insurance industry is in turn, an important source of investment in the economy.

Americans want government to provide more incentives for saving, not less. It is indeed ironic that while the administration acknowledges the need for more tax favored saving opportunities, they have chosen to propose the elimination of life insurance annuities as an attractive investment.

I have authored a sense-of-the-Senate resolution expressing opposition to the proposed taxation of life insurance annuities. I invite my colleagues to join as cosponsors.•

"(A) the requirements of applicable State law;

"(B) the specific refund requirements established by an institution's nationally recognized accrediting agency and approved by the Secretary; or

"(C) the pro rata refund requirement described in paragraph (2), except that this paragraph shall not apply to the institution's refund policy for any student whose date of withdrawal from the institution is after the halfway point (in time) in the period of enrollment for which the student has been charged.

"(2) PRO RATA REFUND.—As used in this section, the term 'pro rata refund' means a refund by the institution to a student attending such institution for the first time of not less than that portion of the tuition, fees, room and board, and other charges assessed the student by the institution equal to the portion of the period of enrollment for which the student has been charged that remains on the last day of attendance by the student.

"(3) REFUND CREDIT.—For purposes of this section, a refund first shall be credited against any part B loan assistance and second against any grant awarded a student under this title for the period of enrollment.

"(B) the amount required to be allocated to that institution under subsection (c) of section 462.

"(3) From the remainder of such excess, the Secretary shall reallocate the remainder, in accordance with regulations, to eligible institution which did not return to the Secretary any portion of the sums allocated to such institution.".

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF S. 543 AS REPORTED BY THE BANKING COMMITTEE

• Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I ask to insert in the RECORD a section-by-section analysis of S. 543, the Comprehensive Deposit Insurance Reform and Taxpayer Protection Act of 1991, as reported by the Banking Committee to the full Senate on October 1, 1991.

The section-by-section analysis follows:

TITLE I—BANK INSURANCE FUND RECAPITALIZATION

SECTION 101. FDIC BORROWING AUTHORITY

Section 101(a) amends and recodifies section 14 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. §1824) to increase the authority of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation ("FDIC") to borrow from the Treasury and the Federal Financing Bank ("FFB") to meet the liquidity needs of the Bank Insurance Fund ("BIF").

Section 101(b) amends the limitation on total outstanding FDIC obligations in section 15(c) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act. 12 U.S.C. §1825(c). All borrowing under amended section 14 will be subject to the limitations of section 15(c).

A. Treasury loans

Section 101(a) amends section 14 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, which currently authorizes the FDIC to borrow from the Treasury such funds as the FDIC Board of Directors deems required for insurance purposes, not exceeding $5 billion.

1. Authority to borrow for insurance costs

Paragraph (1) of new section 14(a) generally authorizes the FDIC to borrow from the Treasury, and the Treasury to lend to the FDIC, in accordance with section 14 and subject to the limit on aggregate borrowing by the FDIC set forth in section 15(c).

2. Loan purposes

Paragraph (2) specifies the purposes for which the FDIC may borrow from the Treasury. Specifically, the FDIC may borrow only to cover (1) losses incurred by the FDIC in protecting depositors (including losses to the BIF or the SAIF), or (2) administrative costs associated with resolving FDIC-insured depository institutions.

3. Priority for repayment of loss borrowings

Paragraph (3) governs the priority in which the FDIC expends its income from premiums assessed on members of either deposit insurance fund.

Under paragraph (3)(A), the Corporation should use such income, first, to make any scheduled payments on borrowings from the Treasury on behalf of the fund; second, to provide for the fund's expected operating expenses and to cover new insurance losses to the fund as they occur; and last, to increase the fund's cash reserves.

Paragraph (3)(B) creates a limited exception to the priority order established in paragraph (3)(A). When the FDIC has borrowed from the Treasury on behalf of a fund, and the cash reserve balance of that fund exceeds $5 billion, subparagraph (B) requires the FDIC to use income from assessments on members of that fund, first, to make any scheduled payments on borrowings from the Treasury on behalf of the fund; second, to provide for the fund's expected operating expenses and to cover insurance losses to the fund as they occur; and last, to accelerate repayment of any Treasury borrowings.

4. Interim rule

Paragraph (4) prohibits the FDIC from reducing the deposit insurance assessment rates in effect on July 15, 1991, for members of any deposit insurance fund if (1) the FDIC has borrowed from the Treasury on behalf of the fund, or (2) the fund's reserve ratio remains below the designated reserve ratio. This prohibition will remain in effect until the risk-based deposit insurance assessment system in section 212 becomes effective. (New section 7(b)(2)(E)–(F), as added by section 212, will then serve a similar purpose.)

5. Terms

Paragraph (5) permits the Secretary of the Treasury to lend under section 14(a) only in accordance with a written agreement that (1) sets forth a schedule for repaying the loan over a period not exceeding 15 years from the date of the loan, and (2) provides that the loan shall bear interest at the current market yield (as of the date of the loan) on outstanding Treasury obligations of comparable maturities. The written agreement may include additional terms, as long as those terms are consistent with those required by paragraph (5).

Paragraph (5) permits the Secretary to lend under section 14(a) only if the Secretary has determined in writing that income to the deposit insurance fund on behalf of which the loan will be made will suffice to repay the loan in accordance with the agreement.

6. Limit on total borrowing for insurance costs

Paragraph (6) limits the FDIC's aggregate outstanding borrowings from the Treasury under section 14(a). The limit is $30 billion until the BIF's reserve ratio first equals or exceeds the designated reserve ratio for a complete semiannual assessment period. The limit then falls to $10 billion and remains at that level even if the BIF's reserve ratio again declines below the designated reserve ratio.

Of the FDIC's aggregate borrowings under section 14(a), no more than $5 billion may be on behalf of the SAIF.

7. Public debt status

Consistent with current law, paragraph (7) provides that loans and repayments under section 14(a) shall be treated as public debt transactions of the Federal Government.

8. Apportionment of liability

Consistent with current law, paragraph (8) apportions liability for any loan from the Treasury between the BIF and the SAIF in accordance with the amount of the loan used on behalf of each fund.

B. Federal financing bank loans

1. Authority to borrow for working capital

Paragraph (1) reenacts and amends portions of current section 14(b) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act. Generally, it authorizes the FDIC (on behalf of either the BIF or the SAIF) to borrow from the Federal Financing Bank ("FFB"), and the FFB to lend to the FDIC, in accordance with section 14(b). The FFB may prescribe terms for such loans.

2. Purposes

Paragraph (2) permits the FDIC to borrow from the FFB only for two working capital purposes: first, to finance the acquisition, retention, maintenance, liquidation, disposal, or improvement of the assets of an FDIC-insured depository institution in the course of the FDIC's resolution and receivership activities; or second, to provide temporary liquidity to insured depository institutions to the extent otherwise authorized by statute.

3. Limitation on borrowing for working capital

Paragraph (3) limits the FDIC's borrowings from the FFB on behalf of the BIF to $45 billion.

4. Effect on other entities

Paragraph (4), which reenacts current law, indicates that section 14(b)—in specifying the FDIC's authority to borrow from the FFB—creates no negative implication about the borrowing authority of other entities.

C. Limitation on total outstanding obligations

1. Current law

Section 15(c) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act currently limits the FDIC's total outstanding obligations. 12 U.S.C. §1825(c). Paragraph (5) of current section 15(c) forbids the FDIC to issue any obligation or guarantee on behalf of either deposit insurance fund if the fund's net worth would be less than 10 percent of assets after reduction for the cost of the obligation or guarantee. Current paragraph (6) allows the FDIC, with the prior approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to issue or incur an additional $5 billion of liabilities in excess of the limitations in paragraph (5). To the extent the FDIC exercises its authority under section 15(c)(6), however, its borrowing authority under section 14(a) diminishes. Current paragraph (7) requires the FDIC to calculate the assets and net worth of the BIF and SAIF based on the most recent audits of those funds by the Comptroller General.

2. Revised limitation

Section 102(b) of the bill replaces paragraphs (5), (6), and (7) of current section 15(c) with new paragraphs (5) and (6).

a. Limitation on maximum amount of outstanding obligations

New paragraph (5) forbids the FDIC to issue any note or incur any liability if the FDIC's obligations on behalf of the BIF or SAIF would exceed the sum of that fund's cash balance, plus 90 percent of the estimated fair market value of its noncash assets, plus the aggregate amount of any loans outstanding under section 14(a). The new paragraph (5) further requires that the FDIC base its estimate of the fair market value of its noncash estimates on the GAO's most recent audit of FDIC.

b. Obligation defined

New paragraph (6) defines "obligations" of the FDIC for purposes of paragraph (5). The term includes any guarantee by the FDIC other than deposit guarantees, any extension of credit from the Treasury or the FFB to the FDIC under section 14, and any other note, bond, or contract for which the FDIC has a direct or contingent liability. In the case of a contingent liability, the amount subject to the borrowing limit should be the expected cost of the contingent liability (i.e., conceptually, the sum of the contingent liability's cost under the full range of possible future events, with each cost multiplied by the event's probability).

Taken together, amended section 15(c) and new section 14(b)(3) limit the FDIC's total borrowings from the FFB on behalf of the BIF to the lesser of $45 billion or the sum of the BIFs cash balance plus 90 percent of the estimated fair market value of the fund's noncash assets. Working capital borrowings will be repaid from the proceeds of sales by the FDIC of assets of failed institutions. Should sales proceeds prove insufficient for that purpose, the FDIC must recognize the shortfall as a loss to be subtracted from the fund's assets and, if necessary, funded through borrowings under section 14(a).

D. Conforming amendment

Section 101(c) section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. §1813) to define "deposit insurance fund" as the Bank Insurance Fund or Savings Association Insurance Fund, as the case may be.

SECTION 102. RECAPITALIZING BANK INSURANCE FUND

This section amends section 7(b)(1)(C) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act to provide a system for setting assessment rates for BIF members sufficient to repay borrowings by the FDIC under section 14(a) and return the BIF's reserve ratio to the designated reserve ratio.[1]

New section 7(b)(1)(C), which applies to the BIF alone, will remain in force until the risk-based deposit insurance assessment system in section 212 becomes effective, and will then be replaced by new section 7(b)(3) (as added by section 212), which will apply to both the BIF and the SAIF. The SAIF is treated differently than the BIF in order to preserve SAIF-related transition provisions enacted as part of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 ("FIRREA").

[1] Section 7(b)(1)(B) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act establishes the "designated reserve ratio" of both the BIF and the SAIF as 1.25 percent of estimated insured deposits or such higher percentage of estimated insured deposits as the Board of Directors determines for that year to be justified by circumstances raising a significant risk of substantial future losses to the fund.

A. General rule

Clause (i) of new section 7(b)(1)(C) establishes the general rule that, when the BIF's reserve ratio equals or exceeds the designated reserve ratio, the FDIC Board should set assessment rates for BIF members so as to maintain the BIF's reserve ratio at the designated reserve ratio.

B. Special rules for recapitalizing undercapitalized funds

Clause (ii) establishes the standard for setting assessment rates for BIF members when the BIF's reserve ratio is less than the designated reserve ratio. In that event, the Board should set assessment rates so as either to rebuild the fund to the designated reserve ratio within one year, or to achieve an interim target reserve ratio under a recapitalization schedule promulgated by the FDIC.

C. Recapitalization schedules

If the BIF's reserve ratio is less than the designated reserve ratio, and the FDIC elects not to set an assessment rate for BIF members sufficient to achieve the designated reserve ratio within one year, the FDIC must promulgate—if it has not already promulgated—a recapitalization schedule for the BIF and the set the assessment rate for BIF members in accordance with that schedule. Clause (iii) requires that such a recapitalization schedule specify target reserve ratios for the BIF at semiannual intervals, culminating in a reserve ratio equal to the designated reserve ratio by the end of the period determined under the following clause.

D. Date for achieving designated ratio

Clause (iv) provides a mechanism for determining the date by which the BIF's reserve ratio must equal the designated reserve ratio in a recapitalization schedule promulgated under clause (iii). Subclause (I) limits the maximum permissible time period for rebuilding the BIF to 15 years. Subclause (II) provides a formula for calculating the maximum permissible time period that may yield a maximum period less than 15 years, depending on the extent of the shortfall in the BIF's reserves. The formula provides a maximum time period that increases directly with the extent of the shortfall. If the designated reserve ratio remains 1.25 percent, the formula will provide roughly 1 year for rebuilding the BIF for each 0.083 percent of insured deposit by which the BIF's actual reserve ratio falls short of the designated ratio.

E. Amending schedule

Clause (v) permits the FDIC to amend a recapitalization schedule promulgated under clause (iii) if the amendments do not extent the final deadline for rebuilding the BIF to the designated reserve ratio. Under clause (v), the FDIC could, for example, adjust interim target reserve ratios to avoid excessive burdens on the banking industry during a recession. Once the FDIC has promulgated a recapitalization schedule, however, the final deadline for achieving the designated reserve ratio will remain fixed unless the FDIC succeeds in extending the schedule under clauses (vi) and (vii).

F. Procedure for extending schedule

Clause (vi) sets forth the procedures the FDIC must follow to extend a recapitalization schedule. The FDIC must determine that maintaining assessments at levels sufficient to achieve the designated reserve ratio by the end of the schedule period would significantly increase losses to the fund or significantly impair the availability of credit. If the FDIC makes such a determination, it may submit a report to Congress setting forth a revised schedule and providing a detailed justification for the revision. The FDIC may not, however, implement the revised schedule unless Congress enacts a joint resolution of approval within 60 calendar days (excluding days on which either House of Congress is adjourned for more than 3 days to a date certain or is adjourned sine die) of receiving the FDIC's report.

G. Procedures for expedited congressional consideration

Clause (vii) specifies the wording of the joint resolution Congress must pass before the FDIC can implement a revised capitalization schedule, and sets forth procedures for expedited congressional consideration of such a joint resolution. When the FDIC submits a report to the Congress under clause (vi), a joint resolution allowing the FDIC to implement the proposed revised schedule contained in the report will be introduced by request in the House of Representatives and in the Senate. The appropriate House and Senate committees will then have 30 days in which to report the joint resolution. Any committee that fails to do so will be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution. To expedite consideration of the joint resolution, it will be considered in the Senate in accordance with section 601(b) of the International Security Assistance and Arms Export Control Act of 1976 (Pub. L. 94-329), which limits debate to 10 hours. In the House of Representatives it will be treated as highly privileged.

H. Special assessment to recover losses on foreign deposits

Clause (viii)(I) establishes a general rule requiring the FDIC to recover as soon as practicable through special assessments on foreign deposits any "payment with respect to foreign deposits." That term refers to the ratio of an institution's foreign deposits to its total liabilities, multiplied by the estimated total loss incurred by the deposit insurance fund with respect to the institution.

Clause (viii)(II) provides different rules for calculating the ratio of the institution's foreign deposits to total liabilities, depending on when the "payment with respect to foreign deposits" occurs. The distinguishing feature between the different rules is the time at which the amounts of foreign deposits and total liabilities are determined.

Before January 1, 1995, the ratio of the institution's foreign deposits to total liabilities shall be calculated based on either (1) the amounts of those deposits and liabilities on the date on which the FDIC appointed a receiver for the institution or initiated assistance under section 13(c) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, or (2) the average amounts of those deposits and liabilities between the date on which the institution was significantly undercapitalized and first received an advance from a Federal Reserve bank and the date on which the FDIC appointed a receiver for the institution or initiated assistance under section 13(c) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act. Clause (viii)(II) directs the FDIC to choose whichever method of calculation yields the greater quotient.

After January 1, 1995, the ratio of the institution's foreign deposits to total liabilities shall be calculated from the amounts of such deposits and liabilities on the date on which the FDIC appointed a receiver for the institution or initiated assistance under section 13(c) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

Clause (viii)(IV) defines "foreign deposit" as any deposit described in subparagraph (A) or (B) of section 3(l)(5) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

SECTION 103. GAO AUDIT OF RECAPITALIZATION SCHEDULE

Section 17(d)(1) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act requires the Comptroller General to audit annually the financial transactions of the FDIC, the Bank Insurance Fund, the Savings Association Insurance Fund, and the FSLIC Resolution Fund in accordance with generally accepted government auditing standards. 12 U.S.C. §1827(d)(1). This section amends section 17(d)(1) to require the Comptroller General, as part of the annual audit, to audit the FDIC's compliance with any capitalization schedule promulgated under section 7(b)(1)(C) in effect at the time of the audit.

SECTION 104. EMERGENCY GUARANTEE

This section provides for the Secretary of the Treasury, upon written request by the State of Rhode Island or the Depositors Economic Protection Corporation (the "Corporation") established by that State, to guarantee the repayment of up to $180 million in borrowing by the Corporation. This will assist in the repayment of depositors at certain state-chartered banks and credit unions in receivership in Rhode Island that were not FDIC-insured.

The Secretary of the Treasury may guarantee borrowing by the Corporation only if the Director of the Office of Management and Budget determines that the guarantee has no net cost to the United States Government. The Secretary may guarantee only Corporation borrowing that occurs within 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act. The borrowing must mature within 10 years and must be scheduled to be repaid in equal installments of principal during the last 5 years of its repayment term.

No guarantee may be made unless the amount of the borrowing for which the guarantee is requested is fully secured by a grant by the Corporation to the United States of a first mortgage lien and prior perfected security interest in sufficient performing assets held by the Corporation and all proceeds from the sales of such assets. The appraised market value of such pledged collateral must be at least 2.5 times the principal amount of the borrowing at the time of the borrowing. The borrowing must also be secured by a pledge by the Corporation of any revenue from the Rhode Island sales tax dedicated to the Corporation, in excess of the amount necessary to pay principal and interest on any obligation issued by Rhode Island or the Corporation before the date of enactment to repay the depositors. Each proposed borrowing must receive the highest investment grade rating by a nationally recognized statistical rating organization before a guarantee can be made. In addition, all income received in a fiscal year by the Corporation from or attributable to assets pledged to the United States as collateral, in excess of the amount necessary to pay principal and interest on any borrowings guaranteed by the Secretary, must be deposited into a sinking fund dedicated to the repayment of guaranteed borrowings.

The Secretary will assess and collect from the Corporation a guarantee fee at least annually. The guarantee fee will be computed daily at a rate of at least one-half of one percent per year on the outstanding principal amount of borrowing guaranteed. All fees received by the Secretary shall be paid into the general fund of the Treasury.

The Secretary may establish additional terms and conditions for provision of a guarantee as he or she deems appropriate.

This section is subject to the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended by the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990.

TITLE II—DEPOSIT INSURANCE REFORM

SECTION 201. FULL FAITH AND CREDIT

Section 201 provides that the full faith and credit of the United States stands behind deposit insurance under the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

Previous legislation has declared "the sense of the Congress that it should reaffirm that deposits up to the statutorily prescribed amount in federally insured depository institutions are backed by the full faith and credit of the United States." Pub. L. No. 100-86, §901, 101 Stat. 552, 657 (1987); accord, H. Con. Res. 290, 96 Stat. 2639 (1982). Likewise, current law requires savings associations (and permits banks) to display a sign containing a "statement that insured deposits are backed by the full faith and credit of the United States Government." 12 U.S.C. §1828(a)(1)-(2). Section 201 is intended to avoid any possible ambiguity about the Government's obligation to insured depositors.

SECTION 202. IMPROVING CAPITAL STANDARDS

A. Periodic review of capital standards

Section 202(a) adds a new section 18(o) to the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, aimed at improving capital standards for FDIC-insured depository institutions. Section 18(o) requires each Federal banking agency, in consultation with the other Federal banking agencies, to review its capital standards for insured depository institutions biennially. Each agency must determine whether its capital standards require sufficient capital to facilitate prompt corrective action to prevent or minimize loss to the deposit insurance funds, consistent with section 37 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (as added by section 205).

B. Review of risk-based capital standards

Section 202(b) requires each Federal banking agency to revise its risk-based capital standards for insured depository institutions to ensure that those standards take adequate account of interest-rate risk, concentration of credit risk, and the risks of nontraditional activities. Each agency must promulgate final regulations to implement those revisions within 18 months after the bill becomes law, and must establish reasonable transition rules to facilitate compliance with the revised capital standards. The Federal banking agencies must discuss the development of comparable standards with members of the supervisory committee of the Bank for International Settlements (which developed the International Convergence of Capital Measurement and Capital Standards, commonly known as the Basel Accord).

C. Federal banking agencies defined

Section 202(c) adds a new section 3(z) to the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, defining "Federal banking agencies" as the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Office of Thrift Supervision, the Federal Reserve Board, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. This new definition complements section 3(q), which defines "appropriate Federal banking agency" by reference to the types of institutions each agency regulates.

SECTION 203. ACCOUNTING AND AUDITING REFORM

A. Accounting reform

Section 203(a) adds a new section 18(p) to the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, setting forth the objectives of accounting principles for FDIC-insured depository institutions and establishing a process for achieving those objectives.

1. Objectives

Paragraph (1) of new section 18(p) declares that accounting principles applicable to insured depository institutions should (1) result in financial statements and reports of condition that accurately reflect the economic condition of those institutions, and (2) facilitate effective supervision of insured depository institutions, including prompt corrective action to resolve troubled institutions' problems with no or minimal loss to the deposit insurance fund.

2. Improving accounting principles applicable to insured depository institutions

Paragraph (2) requires the Federal Financial Institutions Coordination Council (as reconstituted by section 441), in consultation with the Securities and Exchange Commission, to facilitate the development of accounting principles that meet the objectives set forth in paragraph (1). The phrasing of paragraph (2)—"facilitate the development"—anticipates that the Council will work closely with the Financial Accounting Standards Board. The optimal result would be for the Board to reform generally accepted accounting principles ("GAAP") so that they meet the objectives in paragraph (1).

3. Stringency

Paragraph (3) requires each Federal banking agency to prescribe accounting principles applicable to insured depository institutions no less conservative than GAAP. The agency may prescribe accounting principles more conservative than GAAP as appropriate to facilitate effective supervision of insured depository institutions, including prompt corrective action to resolve troubled institutions' problems at no or minimal loss to the deposit insurance fund.

B. Improvements in financial management

Section 203(b) adds a new section 36 to the Federal Deposit Insurance Act. New section 36 requires certain improvements in reporting by the management of insured depository institutions. These improvements are intended to facilitate the system of prompt corrective action established under section 205 by requiring the compilation and disclosure of reliable information concerning insured depository institutions' financial condition and management.

1. Annual report on financial condition and management

Subsection (a) of new section 36 generally requires all insured depository institutions to make an annual report on their financial condition and management. Subsection (j) sets forth the only exception, for small institutions.

a. Report required

Paragraph (1) of subsection (a) requires each insured depository institution to submit an annual report to the FDIC and the appropriate Federal banking agency (the institution's primary Federal regulator). A State-chartered institution must also submit the report to its State bank supervisor.

The report required by paragraph (1) must include several specific items. First, in accordance with subsection (b), the report must include the institution's financial statements and a report by the institution's management on internal controls and compliance with designated safety-and-soundness laws. Second, in accordance with subsections (c) and (d), the report must include an attestation and report by the institution's independent public accountant on both the institution's financial statements and the report by the institution's management on internal controls and compliance with safety-and-soundness laws. Finally, the report must include such other information as the FDIC and the institution's primary Federal regulator may require for assessing the institution's financial condition and management.

b. Report to be publicly available

Paragraph (2) requires that institutions and their regulators make the reports required under paragraph (1) available for inspection by the public.

2. Management's responsibility for financial statements and internal controls

Subsection (b) provides detail on those portions of the annual report required by subsection (a) that a depository institution must prepare. (Subsections (c) and (d) provide comparable detail on the portions to be prepared by the institution's independent public accountant.) Specifically, subsection (b) requires each depository institution to prepare both annual financial statements and a report on internal controls and compliance with safety-and-soundness laws.

a. Financial statements

Paragraph (1) of subsection (b) requires that the institution's annual financial statements be prepared in accordance with both generally accepted accounting principles and such other disclosure requirements as the FDIC or the institution's primary Federal banking regulator may prescribe. The reference to "such other disclosure requirements" includes requirements established by the FDIC or the institution's primary Federal banking regulator under new sections 7(a)(3) and 18(p) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (added by sections 225(a) and 203(a) of the bill).

b. Internal controls

Paragraph (2) requires that the institution's report on internal controls and compliance with safety-and soundness laws include two items. First, the report must include a statement of management's responsibility for preparing financial statements, establishing and maintaining an adequate internal control structure and procedures for financial reporting, and complying with designated safety-and-soundness laws. Second, the report must include an assessment, as of the end of the institution's most recent fiscal year, of both the effectiveness of the institution's internal control structure and procedures and the institution's compliance with designated safety-and-soundness laws. The report must be signed by the institution's chief executive officer and chief accounting or chief financial officer.

3. Internal control evaluation and reporting requirements for independent public accountants

Subsections (c) and (d) describe the responsibilities of each insured depository institution's independent public accountant in connection with the report required under subsection (a).

Subsection (c) describes the independent public accountant's responsibilities for the report required under subsection (b)(2). Specifically, each insured depository institution's independent public accountant must attest to, and report separately on, the assertions of the institution's management contained in the report. The attestation must accord with generally accepted standards for attestation engagements.

4. Annual independent audits of financial statements

Subsection (d) describes the independent public accountant's responsibilities for the annual financial statements required under subsection (b)(1). Specifically, paragraph (1) of subsection (d) requires the FDIC, in consultation with the other Federal banking agencies, to prescribe regulations requiring each insured depository institution to have its annual financial statements audited by an independent public accountant in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards.

Paragraph (2) describes the scope of the independent public accountant's audit of the institution's financial statements. The independent public accountant must determine and report on whether the institution's financial statements are presented fairly in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles and comply with such other disclosure requirements as the FDIC and the appropriate Federal banking agency may prescribe. Again, the reference to "other disclosure requirements" includes requirements prescribed under sections 7(a)(3) and 18(p) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

Paragraph (3) of subsection (d) permits insured depository institutions that are subsidiaries of holding companies to comply with the requirement for an annual audit of their financial statements through a consolidated independent audit of the holding company.

5. Detecting and reporting violations of designated safety-and-soundness laws

Subsection (e) details the responsibilities of each insured depository institution's independent public accountant in connection with its audit of management's statements regarding its responsibility for complying with designated safety-and-soundness laws and management's assessment of the institution's compliance with those laws. Paragraph (1) of subsection (e) requires the accountant to apply procedures agreed upon by FDIC to determine objectively the extent to which each insured depository institution or depository institution holding company has complied with designated safety-and-soundness laws. The reference to "procedures agreed upon by the Corporation" indicates that the FDIC should be cognizant of the recommendations of the accounting profession and the Federal banking agencies in identifying appropriate procedures for determining the extent of compliance with designated safety-and-soundness laws. "Determine objectively," as used in paragraph (1), does not preclude the use of sampling procedures sufficient to provide a reasonable basis for attestation. The phrase "or depository institution holding company" accommodates subsection (j)'s provision for holding company reporting in the case of holding company subsidiaries.

Paragraph (2) of subsection (e) requires any attestation by an independent public accountant in connection with the audit of management statements on and assessments of compliance with designated safety-and-soundness laws to accord with generally accepted standards for attestation engagements.

6. Form and content of reports and auditing standards

Subsection (f) sets forth general rules concerning the form and content of reports by independent public accountants required under new section 36. In particular, the scope of such reports, and the procedure followed in preparing such reports, must satisfy generally accepted auditing standards ("GAAS") and other applicable standards recognized by the FDIC. The phrase "and other applicable standards" permit the FDIC to require the observance of auditing standards above and beyond GAAS standards as necessary to protect the deposit insurance funds. The conjunction "and" connotes that non-GAAS standards thus recognized should not replace or derogate from GAAS standards but, on the contrary, should complement and strengthen the application of GAAS standards. Subsection (f) further requires the FDIC to consult with the other Federal banking agencies in implementing subsection (f).

7. Improved accountability

Subsection (g) includes five measures intended to enhance the accountability of the management of an insured depository institution for internal control weakness, failure to comply with safety-and-soundness laws, and unsound financial condition.

a. Independent audit committee

Paragraph (1) of subsection (g) requires each insured depository institution to establish an audit committee consisting of independent members of the institution's board of directors.

Subparagraph (A) of paragraph (1) specifies certain criteria for independence: Members of the audit committee must be neither officers, nor employees, nor major shareholders of the institution. In addition, they must satisfy any additional requirements established by the FDIC. The language permitting the FDIC to impose additional requirements reflects the fact that factors other than employment by or ownership of an institution may compromise a director's independence from that institution. For example, a director's independence may be compromised by relying on the institution for financing his or her business interests, by ongoing contractual relationships with the institution, and by numerous other factors.

Subparagraph (B) details the duties of independent audit committees. Such committees shall be responsible for reviewing with the institution's management and the institution's independent public account the basis for reports issued and audits made under subsections (b)(2), (c), and (d). Independent audit committees should take care to fully understand the nature and extent of any weaknesses detected by the independent public accountant and work to ensure that the full board of directors and management of the institution identify and implement appropriate corrective measures. "Duties" in subparagraph (b) connotes a fiduciary obligation for the breach of which members of an audit committee may have civil liability.

Subparagraph (C) mandates certain additional characteristics for the audit committees of large insured depository institutions. Such audit committees must include members with expertise in banking or the management of related financial services; have discretion to retain independent legal counsel, at the institution's expense; and not include any large customers of the institution. Subparagraph (C) gives the FDIC discretion to define "large" with respect to both the size of the institutions falling within the scope of the subparagraph and the size of customer sufficient to merit disqualification from service on the audit committee. "Independent" legal counsel, in the context of the subparagraph, means legal counsel serving at the sole pleasure of the audit committee, over whose retention and payment neither the management, nor the officers, nor the full board of directors have any discretion whatever. Independent audit committees may from time to time require advice of counsel, for example, to evaluate the seriousness of weaknesses detected by the independent accountant or to review the adequacy of corrective measures adopted by the full board of directors or the management. The subparagraph does not authorize an independent audit committee or its members to retain legal counsel for purposes beyond the scope of the independent audit committee's responsibilities.

b. Review of quarterly reports of large insured depository institutions

Paragraph (2) of subsection (g) authorizes the FDIC to require an independent public accountant retained by a large insured depository institution to review the institution's quarterly financial reports. Subparagraph (A) of paragraph (2) sets forth the grant of authority to the FDIC. The FDIC has discretion to define "large" and to delineate the procedures according to which the accountant should conduct the review. As in subsection (e), the phrase "procedures agreed upon by the Corporation" reflects an expectation that the FDIC will be cognizant of the recommendations of the accounting profession and the Federal banking agencies in identifying appropriate procedures for determining the extent of compliance with designated safety-and-soundness laws.

Under subparagraph (B), when the FDIC exercises its authority under subparagraph (A), the insured depository institution's independent public accountant must report to the institution's independent audit committee on its review of the institution's quarterly financial reports. Subparagraph (B) makes the audit committee, in turn, responsible for providing copies of the independent public accountant's report to the FDIC, the institution's primary Federal banking regulator and, in the case of State institutions, the appropriate State bank supervisor.

Subparagraph (C) provides that reports by an independent public accountant under subparagraph (B) shall be made solely for the information and use of the insured depository institution, the FDIC, the institution's primary Federal banking regulator, and any appropriate State bank supervisor.

c. Qualifications of independent public accountants

Paragraph (3) establishes minimum standards for the qualification of independent public accountants to perform services under new section 36.

Subparagraph (A) of paragraph (3) prohibits any insured depository institution from retaining an independent public accountant to perform services required by new section 36 unless the accountant satisfies two criteria. First, the accountant must have agreed to provide, upon request, any working papers, policies, and procedures related to the accountant's performance of those services to the FDIC, the appropriate Federal banking agency for the institution, and in the case of State-chartered institutions, the appropriate State bank supervisor.

Second, the accountant must have received a peer review that meets guidelines acceptable to the FDIC. The accounting profession currently administers its own peer and quality review programs. Subparagraph (A) does not preclude the FDIC from relying upon the peer review programs of the profession if the FDIC determines, upon review, that such programs provide an assurance of quality satisfactory to the FDIC. The phrase "guidelines acceptable to the FDIC" includes both the procedures for peer review and the outcome of those procedures.

Subparagraph (B) requires reports on peer reviews to be filed with the FDIC and made available by the FDIC for public inspection.

d. Enforcement actions

Paragraph (4) authorizes the FDIC or any appropriate Federal banking agency—upon a showing of good cause—to remove, suspend, or bar an independent public accountant from performing services under new section 36. Subparagraph (A) of paragraph (4) sets forth the general grant of authority, which is in addition to other enforcement powers of the FDIC and the Federal banking agencies. Subparagraph (B) requires the Federal banking agencies to jointly issue rules of practice to implement paragraph (4).

e. Notice if accountant's services terminate

Paragraph (5) requires any independent public accountant who ceases to perform services for an insured depository institution under new section 36 to promptly notify the FDIC. The paragraph authorizes the FDIC to prescribe rules for providing such notice.

8. Exchange of reports and information

Subsection (h) establishes requirements for the exchange of certain reports and information among insured depository institutions, their independent auditors, the appropriate Federal banking agencies, and the FDIC. "Independent auditor," as used in subsection (h), means an independent public accountant performing auditing services under new section 36.

a. Report to the independent auditor

Paragraph (1) of subsection (h) requires insured depository institutions to provide their auditors with certain information. In particular, institutions must provide their auditors with a copy of the institution's most recent report of condition, a copy of the institution's most recent report of examination, and a copy of each memorandum of understanding and written agreement in effect between the institution and its Federal or State regulator or supervisor. The institution must also provide its auditor with a report detailing enforcement actions initiated or taken against the institution by the appropriate Federal banking agency or the FDIC under certain provisions of section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act; in the case of State-chartered institutions, any actions initiated or taken under State law that are similar to actions that could be taken by the appropriate Federal banking agency or the FDIC under the same provisions of section 8; and any assessment of a civil money penalty under any other provision of Federal or State law against the institution or any institution-affiliated party.

b. Reports to banking agencies

Paragraph (2) requires depository institutions to provide certain information to their regulators and the FDIC. Subparagraph (A) of paragraph (2) requires each insured depository institution to provide a copy of each report from the institution's auditor, including any qualification to such a report and any management letter, within 15 days after receiving the report, qualification, or letter from the auditor.

Subparagraph (B) requires each insured depository institution to notify the FDIC, the appropriate Federal banking agency, and, in the case of State-chartered institutions, the appropriate State bank supervisor, whenever the institution's auditor resigns or is dismissed or the institution engages a new independent auditor. The notice must state the reasons for the change in auditor and be provided within 15 days after the change occurs. In implementing subparagraph (B), the FDIC and the Federal banking agencies should review the model from 8-K process developed by the Securities and Exchange Commission for a similar purpose and consider whether adopting the same process would satisfy subparagraph (B).

9. Requirements for insured subsidiaries of holding companies

Subsection (i) provides special rules for insured depository institutions that are subsidiaries of holding companies. The rules prescribe circumstances under which consolidated audits of the holding company will suffice in lieu of an audit of an insured depository institution. The rules set forth in subsection (i) do not apply to audits of financial statements under subsection (d). Under subsection (d)(3), audits of financial statements may in all instances be performed on a consolidated basis at the holding company level.

Specifically, subsection (i) permits a depository institution that is a subsidiary of a holding company to satisfy the requirements of new section 36 (other than requirements for an audit of its financial statements) if two conditions are met.

First, services and functions comparable to those required under section 36 must be provided at the holding company level. In general, this requirement will be satisfied if the holding company files an annual report containing the information required by subsection (a) (as further detailed in subsections (b) through (f); maintains an independent audit committee whose composition and responsibilities satisfy subsection (g); retains an independent public accountant qualified in accordance with subsection (g)(3) to provide services required by section 36; and reports to the FDIC, appropriate Federal and State regulatory authorities, and the independent auditor in accordance with the requirements of subsection (h).

Second, the depository institution must satisfy an asset size requirement. An institution satisfies this requirement if it had total assets of less than $5 billion as of the beginning of its fiscal year, or if it had total assets of more than $5 billion and less than $9 billion as of the beginning of its fiscal year together with a CAMEL rating of 1 or 2 (or an equivalent rating under a comparable rating system) from the FDIC or the institution's primary Federal banking regulator on the institution's most recent examination. An insured depository institution whose total assets exceed $9 billion as of the start of its fiscal year may not satisfy section 36 at the holding company level.

10. Exemption for small depository institutions.

Subsection (j) completely exempts certain small depository institutions from new section 36. To qualify for the exemption, an institution's total assets at the beginning of its fiscal year must not exceed the greater of $150 million or such higher amount as the FDIC may prescribe by regulation.

11. Designated safety-and-soundness laws defined

Subsection (k) defines "designated safety-and-soundness laws," as used in new section 36, to mean statutes and regulations relating to safety and soundness as designated by the FDIC or the appropriate Federal banking agency. In designating safety-and-soundness laws to fall within the scope of section 36, the FDIC and the appropriate Federal banking agencies should take cognizance of the requirement of subsection (e)(1) that the extent of compliance with such laws be susceptible to objective determination by an independent public accountant.

C. Effective date

Section 203(c) makes new section 36 effective for a given insured depository institution at the start of the institution's first fiscal year beginning after December 31, 1992.

SECTION 204. ANNUAL EXAMINATIONS

Section 204(a) adds a new section 10(d) to the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, generally requiring annual on-site examinations of all FDIC-insured depository institutions.

A. In general

Paragraph (1) of new section 10(d) requires the appropriate Federal banking agency to conduct a full-scope, on-site examination of each insured depository institution at least once every 12 months. Paragraph (2) specifies that a full-scope, on-site examination by the FDIC satisfies the annual examination requirement. Under paragraph (3), the appropriate Federal banking agency may, in alternate years, accept a State supervisor's examination of a depository institution chartered by that State. The Federal banking agency must be satisfied that the State examination is as rigorous and thorough as the agency's own examinations.

B. 18-month rule for certain small institutions

Under paragraph (4), a well-capitalized institution with total assets of less than $100 million may be examined once every 18 months—instead of annually—if (1) when the institution was most recently examined, its management and its composite condition both received the highest possible rating (i.e., a rating of 1, or "outstanding," on the 5-point CAMEL rating system currently in use); and (2) the institution has not undergone a change in control during the preceding 12 months. The appropriate Federal banking agency should not allow 18 months to elapse between examinations of an institution if the agency has reason to believe that the institution is not well-capitalized or well-managed.

C. Limits on scope of annual examination requirement

Paragraph (5) exempts from the annual examination requirement (1) any institution for which the FDIC is conservator and (2) any bridge bank of which no one other than the FDIC owns any voting securities.

Paragraph (6) provides that the "full-scope, on-site examination" required by new section 10(d) does not include a consumer compliance examination as defined in section 41(b) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (as added by section 523).

D. Effective date; transition rule

Section 204(b) makes new section 10(d) effective one year after the bill becomes law.

Section 204(c) provides a transition period between the effective date and December 31, 1993, during which full-scope, on-site examinations are generally required only every 18 months, rather than every 12 months. But the 12-month rule applies to any institution that (1) when most recently examined, received a less-than-satisfactory rating (i.e., a composite rating of 3, 4, or 5 under the CAMEL system); or (2) underwent a change in control during the preceding 12 months.

SECTION 205. PROMPT CORRECTIVE ACTION

Section 205(a) adds a new section 37 to the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, establishing a system of prompt corrective action to resolve the problems of FDIC-insured depository institutions.

A. Resolving problems to protect deposit insurance funds

The overriding purpose of new section 37 is to resolve the problems of insured depository institutions with no loss or minimal loss to the deposit insurance fund and, when loss cannot be avoided, at the least possible long-term loss to the fund. Each Federal banking agency is to carry out that purpose by taking prompt corrective action to resolve the problems of insured depository institutions.

B. Definitions

Subsection (b) of new section 37 defines various terms used in section 37, with paragraph (1) defining capital categories and paragraph (2) defining other terms.

1. Capital categories

Section 37 classifies insured depository institutions into five capital categories, set forth in subsection (b)(1): (1) well-capitalized; (2) adequately capitalized; (3) undercapitalized; (4) significantly undercapitalized; and (5) critically undercapitalized.

These categories relate an institution's capital to the "required minimum level" for each "relevant capital measure." Subsection (c)(1) generally provides for two "relevant capital measures": a "leverage limit," which relates to an institution's capital to its total assets; and a "risk-based capital requirement," which relates an institution's capital to its risk-adjusted assets. (The appropriate Federal banking agencies have some discretion to revoke these relevant capital measures or prescribe additional measures, as discussed below in connection with subsection (c)(1).) For each relevant capital measure, the appropriate Federal banking agency must set the "required minimum level"—the minimum acceptable level.

Under subsection (b)(1), a "well capitalized" institution has capital significantly exceeding the required minimum level for each relevant capital measure. An "adequately capitalized" institution meets the required minimum level for each relevant capital measure. An institution is "undercapitalized" if it fails to meet the required minimum level for any relevant capital measure, and "significantly undercapitalized" if it is significantly below the required minimum level for any such measure. An institution is "critically undercapitalized" if it fails to meet any critical capital level specified under subsection (c)(3)(A). (As discussed in connection with that subsection, the appropriate Federal banking agency must set a critical capital level for the leverage limit and may set additional critical capital levels.)

The five capital categories, by their terms, overlap to some extent. All institutions are either adequately capitalized or undercapitalized. A well-capitalized institution is also adequately capitalized because it meets the required minimum level for each relevant capital measure. A significantly undercapitalized institution is also undercapitalized because it fails to meet the required minimum level for at least one relevant capital measure.

This overlap makes policy sense—and simplifies the drafting of section 37—because the safeguards applicable to undercapitalized institutions are also intended for significantly undercapitalized and critically undercapitalized institutions, and the safeguards applicable to significantly undercapitalized institutions are also intended for critically undercapitalized institutions.

2. Other definitions

Subsection (b)(2) defines other terms used in section 37: "average," "capital distribution," "capital restoration plan," "company," "compensation," "relevant capital measure," "required minimum level," "senior executive officer," and "subordinated debt."

a. Average

To improve accuracy and impede manipulation, some provisions of section 37 measure compliance on average during a period, rather than on a single date. (For example, subsection (3)(2) governs increases in an undercapitalized institution's average total assets from one quarter to another.) Subparagraph (A) of subsection (b)(2) generally defines the "average" of an accounting item (such as total assets or tangible equity) during a given period as the sum of that item at the close of business on each business day during that period divided by the number of business days in that period—thus providing for daily averaging. The appropriate Federal banking agency may, however, permit weekly averaging by any institution with total assets of less than $300 million that normally files call reports reflecting weekly (rather than daily) averages of accounting items.

b. Capital distribution

Subparagraph (B) defines "capital distribution" broadly as any transaction that falls into any of the following categories: (1) a distribution of cash or other property by an insured depository institution or company to its owners made on account of that ownership (with two exceptions discussed below); (2) a payment by the institution or company to repurchase, redeem, retire, or otherwise acquire any of its shares or other ownership interests (including an extension of credit to finance an affiliate's acquisition of those shares); or (3) a transaction that the appropriate Federal banking agency determines to be in substance a distribution of capital to the owners of the institution or company.

The first category of transactions includes two exceptions: for a dividend consisting only of shares of the institution or company (e.g., a stock dividend), or rights to purchase such shares; and for a payment on the deposits of a mutual or cooperative institution—to the extent that the appropriate Federal banking agency determines that it is not a distribution.

c. Company

Under subparagraph (D), "company" has the same meaning as in section 2 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, which generally defines that term to mean "any corporation, partnership, business trust, association, or similar organization," includes certain other trusts, and excludes certain government-controlled corporations. 12 U.S.C. §1841(b).

d. Compensation

Subparagraph (E) broadly defines "compensation" as including any payment of money or provision of anything else of value in consideration of employment.

e. Senior executive officer

Under subparagraph (H), "senior executive officer" in section 37 has the same meaning as "executive officer" in section 22(h) of the Federal Reserve Act. 12 U.S.C. §375b. In recodifying section 22(h), section 216(a) of the bill defines that term to mean any person who participates or has authority to participate in major policymaking functions of a bank or company.

f. Subordinated debt

Subparagraph (I) defines "subordinated debt" as debt subordinated to the claims of general creditors.

C. Capital standards

Subsection (c) contains several rules relating to capital standards for insured depository institutions.

1. Relevant capital measures

Paragraph (1)(A) of subsection (c) requires the capital standards prescribed by each appropriate Federal banking agency to include a leverage limit and a risk-based capital requirement. Under paragraph (1)(B), the agency may rescind such a capital measure of the agency determines that the capital measure is no longer an appropriate means for carrying out the purpose of section 37, and all other Federal banking agencies concur in that determination. The agency may also establish (or rescind) additional relevant capital measures to carry out the purpose of section 37.

2. Capital categories generally

Paragraph (2) requires each Federal banking agency to prescribe regulations specifying, for each relevant capital measure, the levels at which an insured depository institution is well-capitalized, adequately capitalized, undercapitalized, and significantly undercapitalized. In the case of adequately capitalized institutions, those levels are synonymous with the required minimum levels.

3. Critical Capital

Paragraph (3) requires each Federal banking agency to prescribe regulations specifying a ratio of tangible equity to total assets at which an insured depository institution is critically undercapitalized. The level is to be high enough so that the problems of insured depository institutions can be resolved with no loss or minimal loss to the deposit insurance fund by carrying out subsection (h) when the institution's capital falls below that level—but not less than 2 percent of total assets nor more than 65 percent of the required minimum level of capital under the leverage limit. The agency needs the FDIC's concurrence to specify a level lower than that specified by the FDIC for State nonmember banks.

The agency has discretion to specify a critical capital level for other relevant capital measures (such as the risk-based capital requirement).

D. Provisions applicable to all institutions

Subsection (d) prohibits an insured depository institution from making a capital distribution—or paying a management fee to any person having control of the institution—if the institution would be undercapitalized after making the distribution or payment.

E. Provisions applicable to undercapitalized institutions

Subsection (e) contains safeguards on undercapitalized institutions.

1. Monitoring required

Paragraph (1) of subsection (e) requires the appropriate Federal banking agency to (1) closely monitor the condition of any undercapitalized insured depository institution; (2) closely monitor the institution's compliance with any capital restoration plan, and with any restrictions and requirements imposed by section 37 or by regulators under section 37; and (3) periodically review whether the plan, restrictions, and requirements are achieving the purpose of section 37.

2. Capital restoration plan required

Subparagraph (A) of paragraph (2) requires an undercapitalized institution to submit an acceptable capital restoration plan to the appropriate Federal banking agency.

a. Contents of plan; criteria for accepting plan

Under subparagraph (B), the capital restoration plan must specify (1) the steps the institution will take to become adequately capitalized; (2) the levels of capital to be attained during each year in which the plan is in effect; (3) how the institution will comply with the restrictions and requirements in effect under section 37 when the plan is accepted; and (4) the types and levels of activities in which the institution will engage. The plan must also contain any other information that the agency may require.

Under subparagraph (C), the agency cannot accept a capital restoration plan unless the agency determines that the plan (1) complies with subparagraph (B); (2) is based on realistic assumptions, and is likely to succeed in restoring the institution's capital; and (3) and would not appreciably increase the risks to which the institution is exposed (including credit risk, interest-rate risk, and other types of risk). A plan is not acceptable, moreover, unless each company having control of the institution (a) has guaranteed that the institution will comply with the plan until the institution has been adequately capitalized on average during each of four consecutive calendar quarters, and (b) has provided appropriate assurances of performance. The guarantee requirement is intended to induce the parent company to decide promptly whether to recapitalize the institution, sell it, or stand behind it until it recovers.

b. Guarantee liability limited

Subparagraph (E) limits liability under the guarantee requirement. The aggregate liability of all companies having control of the institution is limited to 5 percent of the institution's total assets at the time the institution became undercapitalized.

Subparagraph (E) is a negative restatement of subparagraphs (A) and (C)(ii): if a company does not have control of an undercapitalized institution, it need not guarantee or otherwise be liable on the institution's capital restoration plan; and only an insured depository institution must submit a capital restoration plan.

c. Deadlines for submission and review of plan

Subparagraph (D) requires the appropriate Federal banking agency to set forth deadlines by regulation for the submission and review of capital restoration plans. The deadlines must give insured depository institutions reasonable time to submit such plans, and require the agency to act on such plans expeditiously. The deadlines must generally require an institution to submit a plan within 30 days after receiving the plan. The 30-day standard is a general guideline, rather than an inflexible rule: the regulation may, as appropriate, prescribe longer periods for particular types of cases and provide for case-by-case extensions.

3. Asset growth restricted

Paragraph (3) restricts an undercapitalized institution's asset growth. Such an institution may not permit its average total assets during any calendar quarter to exceed its average total assets during the preceding calendar quarter unless three conditions are satisfied: (1) the appropriate Federal banking agency has accepted the institution's capital restoration plan; (2) the increase in total assets is consistent with that plan; and (3) the institution's ratio of tangible equity to assets increases during the calendar quarter at a rate sufficient to enable the institution to become adequately capitalized within a reasonable time.

4. Prior approval required for acquisitions, branching, and new lines of business

Under paragraph (4), an undercapitalized institution generally cannot acquire any interest in any company or institution, establish or acquire any additional branch, or engage in any new line of business unless (1) the appropriate Federal banking agency has approved the institution's capital restoration plan; (2) the institution is implementing the plan; and (3) the agency determines the proposed action is consistent with and will further the achievement of the plan.

Exceptions can be made only if the FDIC's Board of Directors determines, by a vote of three-fourths of its members, that the proposed action will further the purpose of section 37. This narrow exception procedure is intended for cases in which an acquisition, additional branch, or new line of business will significantly aid in maintaining the value—and thus facilitating the acquisition or recapitalization—of an institution that cannot satisfy the general rule.

5. Discretionary safeguards

Subsection (f)(2) authorizes the appropriate Federal banking agency to apply various safeguards to a significantly undercapitalized institution. Subsection (e)(5) permits the agency to apply such safeguards to an undercapitalized institution if the agency determines that the safeguards are necessary to carry out the purpose of section 37.

F. Provisions applicable to significantly undercapitalized institutions

1. In general

Subsection (f) applies to (1) any significantly undercapitalized insured depository institution, and (2) any undercapitalized insured depository institution that fails to submit an acceptable capital restoration plan by the deadline established under subsection (e)(2)(D) or materially fails to implement a plan accepted by the appropriate Federal banking agency.

2. Specific actions authorized

Paragraph (2) of subsection (f) authorizes the appropriate Federal banking agency to apply the following safeguards to such an institution, and requires the agency to apply to least one of those safeguards:

a. Requiring sale of shares or obligations

Under subparagraph (A) of paragraph (2), the agency may require the institution to sell enough shares or obligations of the institution so that the institution will be adequately capitalized after the sale. The agency may also specify that the instruments in question be voting shares. Subparagraph (A) thus enables the agency to overcome the reluctance of the institution's management to dilute the interests of existing shareholders (and possibly weaken its own position) by issuing new shares. It also facilitates a market test of the institution's viability: ascertaining whether investors—offered a sufficient stake in the institution—believe that curing the institution's capital deficiency makes economic sense.

b. Restricting transactions with affiliates

Under subparagraph (B), the agency may restrict the institution's transactions with affiliates (1) by denying the institution the exemption in section 23A(d)(1) of the Federal Reserve Act for transactions with certain commonly controlled banks (as explained below), and (2) by further restricting the institution's transactions with affiliates.

Section 23A generally restricts an institution's transactions with any one affiliate to 10 percent of the institution's capital, and restricts the institution's transactions with all affiliates to 20 percent of the institution's capital. 12 U.S.C. §§371c(a)(1), 1468(a)(1), 1828(j)(1). Section 23A also generally requires an institution's extensions of credit to affiliates to be fully secured by acceptable collateral, and prohibits a member bank from purchasing a low-quality asset from an affiliate. Id. §371c(a)(3), (c)(2). Section 23A(d)(1) exempts from the percentage-of-capital restrictions, collateral requirement, and low-quality-asset prohibiting any transaction between the institution and a bank if (1) the bank controls at least 80 percent of the institution's voting shares; (2) the institution controls at least 80 percent of the bank's voting shares; or (3) another company controls at least 80 percent of each institution's voting shares. Id §371c(d)(1). To reduce the potential for troubled institutions to abuse this exemption, subparagraph (B) authorizes the agency to deny the exemption to a significantly undercapitalized institution—and impose further restrictions on the institution's transactions with affiliates.

c. Restricting interest rates paid

Under subparagraph (C), the agency may restrict the interest rates the institution pays on deposits to the prevailing rates of interest on deposits of comparable amounts and maturities in the region where the institution is located, as determined by the agency. Subparagraph (C) does not, however, authorize the agency to restrict interest rates paid on existing time deposits (e.g., certificates of deposit that cannot be withdrawn before a specified date) that have not been renewed or renegotiated.

d. Restricting asset growth

Subparagraph (D) authorizes the agency to restrict the institution's asset growth more stringently than subsection (e)(3)—the general rule restricting asset growth by undercapitalized institutions—or may require the institution to reduce its total assets.

e. Restricting activities

Subparagraph (E) authorizes the agency to require the institution or any of its subsidiaries to alter, reduce, or terminate any activity that the agency determines poses excessive risk to the institution.

f. Improving management

Under subparagraph (F), the agency may (1) order a new election for the institution's board of directors; (2) require the institution to dismiss from office any director or senior executive officer who had held office for more than 180 days immediately before the institution became undercapitalized; or (3) require the institution to employ qualified senior executive officers—and specify that they be acceptable to the agency.

The dismissal authority enables the agency to oust directors and senior executive officers whose continued service would not materially strengthen the institution's ability to overcome its problems. Such a dismissal is not a removal under section 8(e) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. §1818(e)), and thus does not bar other insured depository institutions from employing the dismissed director or officer.

g. Requiring change of auditor

Under subparagraph (G), the agency may require the institution to retain a new independent auditor. The agency should not, however, exercise this authority so as to create disincentives for auditors to be vigilant in uncovering problems and calling for the recognition of losses.

h. Requiring prior approval for capital distributions by bank holding company

Under subparagraph (H), the agency may forbid any bank holding company having control of the institution to make any capital distribution without the prior approval of the Federal Reserve Board.

i. Requiring divestiture
